stove in 1966.

I remember the left rear burner had a deep well built in. It was kind of like a built in stock pot with a lid. You fit the kettle on the burner, twisted, and the burner turned and dropped down inside the stove with the pot. It worked great.

I remember it was 1966 because Mommy and baby sister Joy finally had their turn to go to Florida with Grandpa and Grandma. While they were gone for the week, Daddy and us kids did a remodeling job at home.

Daddy and the kids tried to carry out the big old stove, but it was way too heavy for us. He took a sledge hammer and beat our darling old home comfort wood cookstove to pieces. Us kids carried them out and threw them in a gully hole in the pasture field.

Our bedroom was off the back of the kitchen. In the winter with no heat from that stove anymore, our bedroom was so much colder. We relied heavily on lots of extra quilts on cold nights. We pulled them over our heads with a little breathing tunnel.

We had no phone at our house. All messages were written in a letter and sent through the mail.

We lived a very sheltered life back then. Our parents never set us down and told us anything. It was not a thing back then. I didn't even know where babies come from until I was 10 years old when a girl at my school told me. She knew, because she had several married sisters with children.

I thought babies came from the hospital, cause parents went over there and got them. Nowadays even 2- or 3-year-olds know that babies grow in their Mommy's belly.

Well I remember telling my teacher, Evelyn Barker, that Mommy was going to have another baby because her belly I thought was getting big again.

My teacher must have ask

Daddy about it because he jumped me for it and said, "Don't be telling tales at school, because your mommy
