around yards and gardens.

Pet owners should turn on outside lights and check the yard for unwanted animals before letting pets outside. Pets should be kenneled or supervised when outside.

When walking a dog, use a short, non-retractable leash that is highly visible and vary your walking routine. Do not let a dog chase or “play” with a coyote.

Never feed or approach any wild animal to take pictures or video. Observe and enjoy wildlife from a distance.

“If someone sees a coyote when out for a stroll or while walking their dog, just know that coyotes are curious by nature,” Palmer said. “Sometimes they follow people or dogs just to see what they are doing, or they may be guarding their pups that may be in an unnoticed den nearby. Alter walking routes in the future to avoid suspected den sites.”

Den sites may be in hollow trees or logs, rock crevices, brush piles, abandoned groundhog burrows, or even abandoned buildings or junk piles.

Coyotes are protective of their pups, born in spring or early summer, which stay in the den with the mother for about 3 weeks and learn to hunt when they are 8 to 12 weeks old. Family groups typically break up and disperse in late summer and early fall.

While coyotes are usually more afraid of people, some tips to keep in mind if approached by a coyote include:

Try to scare it away immediately. Don’t stand and watch it.

Shout, whistle, clap your hands, stomp your feet and make some loud noise.

Make yourself appear larger by waving your arms, widening your stance or wave a walking stick.

Establish dominance. Take a step or lunge toward the coyote. Throw a rock or stick in its direction, but not directly at it.

Pick up dogs and small children.

Keep scaring the coyote until it is out of sight.

Stay away from any known or potential dens. If you suspect a den is nearby, slowly back away from the area and do not haze the coyote.

Share these solutions with neighbors so everyone can work together.

Most coyotes do not cause conflict, but the ones that do may be removed individually by a licensed nuisance wildlife control operator, when necessary.

Coyotes may also be hunted year-round, with no limit, with the appropriate hunting license and as allowed by local ordinances.

Information and resources are available on the Kentucky Fish and Wildlife Coyotes webpage.
