Words Of Wisdom Cannot Be Taken Lightly

By Becky Greenwell bgreenw2@bellsouth.

net

I think now that since I have recently had a big-O milestone birthday I have earned the right to say I am a little older and wiser.

There are many pieces of advice mamas have passed down for generations. Things they learned from their mamas who also learned them from their ma-

Though the advice never changed, after becoming older and wiser we realize some of those "good for you" tidbits just aren't so.

Among the lies mamas told were: you'll grow out of it, it's baby fat, there are plenty of other fish in the sea, and my favorite, your face will freeze that

Well, just so you know, my face did not freeze that way. The baby fat turned into having-babies-fat and there were days I did not grow out of acne. Also, there may be more fish in the sea, but a broken heart still hurts and sometimes you have to look long and hard for that special fish.

I repeated those clichés often, and yes, passed them down to my children and grandchildren.

In all my wisdom I acquired through the years, the one thing I was most serious about was to watch what I spoke out loud because it will come back and bite you on the back-

The words, which were not lies, came from my grandma. Simply, never say anything about someone else's children. Don't ever say anything about how they are raising their children or their child's behavior. When comments are spoken aloud then you are cursed. Your children, whether or not, will inherit the same behavior.

If you profess, "My child will never speak to me in that tone," they will do it. If you speak, "I will teach my children to not drink and drive," they will do that.

I saw it happen, and sometimes the behavior was tenfold. I knew it was a truth and I was never letting that happen to me.

Did I say never? Oh, never-say-never. It is a given, it will happen.

There was the time, in a weak moment, I forgot that advice and I spoke words aloud. I got bit on the backside before I could turn around and take it back.

It was fall-break and my son and his family planned a trip. Mackey and G-Daddy were asked to dog-sit. Roo was a cute, little, dog. they are already born He didn't eat much. He didn't bark. He went to his kennel at night when he was told. He behaved when he was on the leash and did his business when he was taken outside.

> That was the first day. But...he did not like G-daddy at all. Whenever G-daddy entered the house, the dog started barking. For such a small dog he had a ferocious highpitched bark that hurt your ears. He became a yippy-barking dog.

He refused to let my husband take him outside so he would carry the dog out and set him on the ground. He refused to budge. He was carried back into the house and did his business on the rug. He loved my collection of dolls. He would drag them into the living room looking so sweet lying next to it with a protective paw across her chest. Sweet until I found the doll's hand was chewed off.

I have a beautiful spider plant with lots of little babies hanging from it sitting on a child's rocker. I lost my patience when I found all the babies chewed off and scattered around the living room.

I told my daughter I was NEVER babysitting any animals again. Maybe I would kids if they stayed away from dolls and plants, and knew where to use the bathroom.

After that little speech we still went to her house to "babysit" one teen-age child while the rest of the family went on their fall break. It would be an easy week. That is until we got there and their cat got sick, possibly drinking antifreeze.

At 10 p.m. my daughter and I were in the emergency animal hospital getting Boots tested for poisoning, or a possible blockage that would require immediate surgery. They were flying out at 5 a.m. the next morning. She looked at me and said, "I know you said no more animals, but someone has to take care of the cat, pick him up at the hospital and take him to the vet at 7

I paused for a long time and finally whispered, "We will do what we have to do."

I asked one of my grandsons' friends to assist me with the cat. The next morning, we picked up Boots at the hospital and took him to the veterinary office/hospital to continue his care. In the end all worked out. He did not drink poison, but had a bladder blockage that was cleared without surgery. He did require four days in the hospital with IVs and antibiotics. They also agreed to board him for the following three days until his family returned

As I left the office, I wished Boots well and told him he was in good hands. I also made a mental note that never-say-never was not a cliché, but definitely
