News from JHC:Third grade students use math manipulatives

Students in Ashley Bartley’s third grade math classes have been working with manipulatives — or hands on objects they can move to demonstrate math skills — throughout the last few weeks. Above, from left, Malia Tooley and Alivia Ramsey use tiles to demonstrate the distributive property of multiplication. Above, right, Rosie Wilson works with Play Doh to demonstrate math skills and (at right) Eli King and Alivia Ramsey working on building arrays out of tiles that match their multiplication problem.

Kassidy Staneart, a student in Ashley Bartley’s third grad math class, is shown above working on making arrays, grouping with PlayDoh to demonstrate what she learned during the unit.
