hire hundreds of new educators so that we can keep classroom size down and increase the time teachers get to work individually with students. It would give full access to preschool, which gives our youngest students a significant head start. School districts could hire more counselors to meet the mental health and emotional needs of our students. It would also keep our Family Resource, Youth Service Centers, school lunch programs and after school programs funded.

A 14% increase in SEEK funds would boost the Breckinridge County School district's budget by $2,623,616. This means an increase of $1,124 for every student in Breckinridge County public schools.

This could be done. But it will not happen unless we make it happen. This is my call to action. Everyone reading this must contact their state Representative and state Senator and ask them to prioritize our students and reinvest in our public schools. Ask them raise SEEK funding 14%. Ask them to fully fund school bus transportation. Ask them to restore funding for textbooks and professional development.

Call them today. Ask your friends and family to call them. The number to the legislative hotline is (502) 564-8100.

Tell them that fully funding the education budget is how you want them to provide options for our public schools.

approximately two years ago. They have been well-received, she added.

"Today, we have 52 hospitals who have voluntarily onboarded out of the 129 that are currently in the commonwealth under the Kentucky Hospital Association," she said.

Bray said hospitals are subscribing to the initiatives on a voluntary basis, and it makes sense to put a critical lens on what patients are consuming, all while supporting local agriculture.

Dana Feldman, KDA's executive director for the Consumer and Environmental Protection Office, said the program is tailored to the needs of different organizations. Feldman and Bray have traveled throughout Kentucky to promote the initiatives.

"Everyone wants to be a part of Food is Medicine. They do see the value in it," Feldman said.

Feldman said Kentucky is a leader in the Food is Medicine efforts.

"I also want to point out that this resolution and the one that will be mirrored in the House is the first of its kind in the nation to declare a state – a Food is Medicine state – and to lay the groundwork for supporting this type of work," she said.

Funke Frommeyer said a positive aspect of Food is Medicine is helping farmers gauge demand.

Sen. Lindsey Tichenor, R-Smithfield, said she strongly supports the concept.

"Just reading through it, I think this is one of the most monumental things that we can do to get Kentucky on the right path as far as health and the impacts that this will have on health care in general," she said.

Sen. Keturah J. Herron, D-Louisville, said she's concerned about the lack of grocery stores in some neighborhoods.

"When we're talking about access, one of the biggest issues is actually brick and mortar. My district is in Louisville. I live in Old Louisville, which is a community that is a very mixed community. You have folks who are living in subsidized housing to millionaires," she said.

Herron said it's not necessarily that residents without a nearby grocery store don't want to eat healthy food; they might not have access to it. She said she's working on a bill to promote grocery store access in rural and urban areas.
