The club has already used the space to interview the manager of Dollar General Market, with plans to interview more members of the community being in fields that the kids would be interested in.

Isabella Santiago, another member of the club, helped with the interview, having enjoyed the process, along with being in charge of the club's TikTok account.

"If you feel overwhelmed, you can come in here and calm down, hang out with friends here," Santiago said.

Santiago and Barber each run two separate clubs that utilizes the space, being a social media club and a music club, respectively run by them.

"The music club is more of teaching

The Boys and Girls Club of Allen County and Scottsville have recently converted a storage room into a Podcast and Social Media Room, with members of the club being able to utilize the space. The room acts as a part of the club's initiative to help encourage youth to pursue different fields, whether it be as a hobby or a career. "Social media is a huge part of how they connect and interact with one another and just stay in the loop and connected," Audrey Plumlee, the unit director for the Scottsville location, explained. "It helps encourage confidence in them. You can see a kid when they start at first, they're a little bit timid, and they're shy and nervous, but then after they've been in it for a while, you see them come out of their shell, which shocked me; I didn't expect it to happen so fast."

them how to use their instrument and how to properly play, and indulge in music," Barber added.

Ariana Connor acts as a director for the podcasts, and enjoys the room, being comfortable in the space.

"(The Means of Teens) is about the view of things based off of teens," Connor said. "I like that it's comfortable for anyone
