•CELEBRATING

essential not only to our economy, but to our way of life.

Yet we also face a challenge as a state. Kentucky has one of the lowest labor participation rates in the nation. That makes it even more important to celebrate and encourage those who show up every day, and the families who are instilling in their children the value of hard work. Whether its teenagers taking on a summer job, college students working part-time, or parents setting an example by their daily commitment, these lessons in responsibility and perseverance are critical to our future.

Labor Day is rooted in the history of America's workers, who built this nation with grit and resolve. Today, it reminds us that the values of hard work, discipline, and service still matter. As Kentucky continues to attract new investment and opportunity, our people remain the greatest asset we have.

Thank you for your hard work, your service, and your continued belief in the power of a job well done. I wish you and your family a safe, restful, and meaningful Labor Day weekend.
