of Blumberg Grain, said that he and his company were looking forward to working with the Coalition to provide the cold storage infrastructure that the counties want to provide.

"Our company has provided food security solutions around the world for a long time but we recently decided to provide our solutions domestically and I am very proud of the fact that we will be assisting these county governments. It's a very unique approach by local governments to aid their region's farmers in this manner but I think it is a great approach and one that I believe will be copied in other parts of the country."

Hart County Judge-Executive Joe Choate said that the Coalition believed that a team approach was the best way to help the region's farmers grow their markets and their opportunities.

"County governments are focused on helping provide the economic development tools that can help key parts of our local economies expand and add the new jobs that we all need. I'm glad that our counties are working together to do this crucial infrastructure work and I applaud Commissioner Shell for his help and assistance on this initiative."

BRACC will initially work with the Commissioner's Office and Blumberg Grain to conduct a feasibility study and initiate preliminary design of the needed facilities and then will work with various funding agencies and the Kentucky General Assembly to put together a financing package for the initial phase of the project.
