What you Need to Know About REAL ID

Senator Max Wise

In just a few days, Kentuckians will face new federal requirements for air travel and federal building access under the REAL ID Act. Starting May 7, standard driver's licenses will no longer be accepted for boarding domestic flights or entering secure federal facilities. Only a REAL ID-compliant license, or an alternative like a U.S. passport or passport card, will meet federal standards.

Earlier this month, I joined my Senate colleagues in sending a letter to Homeland Security Secretary Kristi Noem asking for an additional extension. With only about 37 percent of Kentuckians compliant, many families may face long waits, travel disruptions, and avoidable frustrations.

Let me clarify who actually needs a REAL ID.

•If you fly domestically or visit secure federal buildings, you will need a REAL ID, passport, passport card, or another REAL ID compliant form of ID.

•If you do not fly or visit federal facilities, you do not need a REAL ID. A standard driver's license will still allow you to drive, vote, and conduct everyday activities.

•Alternative options, like passports or military IDs, can also substitute for a REAL ID when traveling or accessing federal buildings.

•If you do not plan on flying soon or visiting a federal building, you do not need to rush to get a REAL ID by May 7. That is the deadline for enforcement, not the deadline to obtain a REAL ID. Appointments will continue to be available after May 7.

Many Kentuckians still face barriers outside their control. Years ago, licensing services moved from local circuit court clerks to regional offices because clerks could not meet federal security standards. Kentucky was the only state using local offices for driver's licenses at the time. With the enactment of REAL ID legislation in 2019, licensing transitioned to regional centers operated by the Kentucky Transportation Cabinet. While the General Assembly has passed laws to help—such as allowing mail-in and online renewals, approving mobile pop-up licensing units to visit unserved counties at least twice annually, and expanding regional offices—day-to-day management of REAL ID remains an executive branch responsibility.

Several issues persist.

•Lack of appointment availability. Currently, many regional offices have no availability until June. There are some available in regional offices in eastern and western Kentucky, but the Louisville, Lexington, and northern Kentucky offices are fully booked.

•Public communication has been lacking, which results in a bottleneck of appointments. It's been unclear who actually needs a REAL ID, and who may not.

•Regional offices are only open one Saturday a month, despite lawmakers urging expanded days and hours. States like New Jersey have expanded hours, but Kentucky has not prioritized problem-solving efforts to maximize our time between now and May 7.

•Staff shortages and morale problems at licensing centers continue to delay services. Please be kind to staff when you visit these offices and events.

Similar patterns of delay, seen during the unemployment insurance backlog and ongoing permitting issues, have been a recurring trend. The Governor provides weekly updates, but has unfortunately not dedicated time in the past several months to raising awareness on this topic.

The average engagement length is 15 months

Getting engaged is a momentous occasion worthy of celebration. However, soon after the question is popped, people in the couple's lives tend to start asking when the big day might be. Newly engaged couples may feel pressured to rush into setting a wedding date, but enjoying one's engagement for however long it may last is an option for brides and grooms. Some couples want to run to the altar in a month, while others are happy to stay engaged indefinitely. The Knot, a trusted wedding resource, surveyed nearly 170,000 American couples in 2024 to gauge how long most were waiting to wed. The Knot 2025 Real Weddings Study found that the average engagement length is 15 months. This number has held steady since 2022. Event Source in Canada says the average engagement length for couples in Canada also is 15 months. In general, couples across North America are waiting just over a year to tie the knot
