

Turns Dinosaur World Into an Appalachian Altar

It’s not every day that a Grammy-nominated singer-song-writer brings his guitar and band to a roadside dinosaur park. But then again, Tyler Childers has never been one to play by the rules. Last week, Childers rolled into Dinosaur World, Cave City’s own prehistoric attraction, for a performance that felt more like a fun-filled Jurassic jamboree than a typical concert.

Members of Childers’ Hickman Holler Hunting Club received an email on July 25 announcing a “one-of-a-kind, top secret pop-up show” in central Kentucky. Only 500 tickets were available and sold through Childers’ fan club using a lottery system, which aimed to benefit genuine fans and avoid online ticket scalping. Those who were selected then received a confirmation email with the tickets and details of the location.

On July 30, the lucky fans made their way into Dinosaur World to experience an iconic moment, as Childers became the first artist to ever perform live at the park.

And Childers didn’t just show up. He made quite the entrance.

The Kentucky native and his band, The Food Stamps, were dressed head-to-toe as characters from the movie Jurassic Park, fully embracing the preshistoric vibe. Childers himself donned an outfit inspired by Dr. Alan Grant, complete with a wide-brimmed hat, dark sunglasses, and a red ascot. Bandmates channeled everyone from John Hammond and Ellie Satler to Ian Malcolm and Robert Muldoon.

With I-65 to his right and a giant T-Rex towering above the stage, Childers stepped to the mic and shouted to his fans, “Welcome to the most magical place on the side of the highway!”

The crowd erupted with excitement.

“This is a little show that we’ve been dying to do forever,” Childers said. “Figured there’s no better time and no better way to do it than right now, and here we are.”
