•CHILDERS

Snipe Hunter is “Bitin’ List”, a light-hearted revenge song about whom Childers’ would bite if he were to contract rabies.

“Oneida’ is an all-time favorite and ‘Nose to the Grindstone.’ I love all of them,” Hamilton said. “It’s a solid album. I was very pleased with it.”

Fans Matt Davis and Dana Hardin, both of Bowling Green, also attended the concert.

Davis said he has been attending Childers’ shows since 2016.

“The first time I heard him, I was like, ‘Wow! Why isn’t this guy more famous?’ Because he was playing in bars when I saw him,” Davis said. “Then when I saw him at Railbird (music festival) the first year, I said, ‘The secret’s out.’”

For Davis, Childers’ music hits close to home.

“The music speaks to me because it relates to Kentucky and where some of my family is from,” he said. “Somebody finally represents that area like it should be and is not trying to capitalize on that area.”

Hardin, who attended the concert at Dinosaur World with her daughter Lacy, said she is drawn to both Childers’ sound and roots.

“He’s a Kentucky artist,” Hardin said. “I just just love the sound.”

Hardin’s current favorite track from Snipe Hunter is “Bitin’ List”, though one of her all-time favorites comes from Childer’s 2022 album Can I Take My Hounds To Heaven?

“‘Way of Triune God’ is probably my favorite,” Hardin said. “It just hits home. It just completely hits home.”

Hardin said she has seen Childers live before, with her first time being at Kroger Field in Lexington. But seeing him at a place like Dinosaur World?

“Absolutely unreal,” she said. “It was fantastic.”

Waiting nearby as Childers met with fans was Dylan McDowell, a dog trainer and close friend of Childers’ who was the inspiration behind “Dirty Ought Trill”, the last track on the Snipe Hunter album.

McDowell said he met Childers nearly four years ago in front of the Noelle Hotel on Fourth Avenue in Nashville.

“I seen him walking his dog downtown, and I used to work at a hotel downtown,” McDowell said. “I literally just walked up to him and started talking about the dog...I got his phone number. We stayed in touch. I didn’t know he did music at first. Every time he would come in town, he would contact me. Me and him would visit each other, see each other, and then probably about two to three months after me and him first became friends, I realized he was a famous singer. I didn’t even know at first...because he was so down to earth and humble.”

A friendship was built, and McDowell said he now goes on tour with Childers.

“It’s fun. It’s unusual and unfamiliar territory to to me because originally, I only listened to rap music and stuff,” McDowell said. “But it’s cool. Like, he opened up my mind and made me versatile to the music world, and I get to see a different side of music because I had never been to a country music show, never been to a meet and greet, album party, or nothing. So it’s pretty cool to be around him with it.”

For McDowell, picking a favorite track off Snipe Hunter was easy - “Dirty Ought Trill” - because it’s about him and his dog.

When asked what it felt like to have Childers give him that kind of recognition, McDowell was nearly at a loss for words.

“I can’t even describe the feeling,” McDowell said. “It’s just super cool that my big brother put me in a song.”

Jobe Publishing was also able to secure a brief exclusive interview with Childers. When asked what it was like to perform at such an unique venue, he responded without pause.

“This is something that I wanted to do forever,” Childers said. “It’s like, wouldn’t it be crazy to do a show at Dinosaur World? We’ve driven by this, you know, me and the boys, since we were kids. Right? It’s like now we get to drive by and say, ‘I played on a stage right there.’ It’s just super cool.”

The concert in Cave City was the second secret pop-up show Childers played during the month of July, promoting songs from his new album.

“The majority of them are new and fresh,” Childers said of the album’s tracks. “We’ve never really played any of them, so they’re all fun.”

As the evening came to a close, Childers took a moment to extend his gratitude to the crowd.

“I just really appreciate everybody coming out and making this such a cool and special night,” he said.

And what a special night it was. For one legendary evening, Dinosaur World roared with something louder than a T-Rex: the sound of Tyler Childers doing things his own way. He didn’t just play a set of new songs and fan favorites.

He claimed the roadside attraction like it was his own Appalachian altar - an altar for the weird, the wild, and the homegrown.
