YOUR FORECAST

This morning will be wet with lingering showers and a few thunderstorms. There will be a break in the activity this afternoon ahead of some strong storms that arrive late this evening into the over-night hours. The potential for damaging winds and heavy rain will be the greatest concerns in any storm in this timeframe. It will be warm with highs in the mid 70s and it will be breezy outside of storms. Showers will continue tonight into Monday morning before drier, cooler weather arrives. Tuesday is the driest day of the week as more active, warm weather returns midweek.

Rain this morning with the threat for strong storms this evening into tonight. Active weather continues later this week.

Pappy Van Winkle bourbon spring raffle is back

Maggie Menderski

Louisville Courier Journal
USA TODAY NETWORK

The Ronald McDonald House Charities of Kentuckiana’s Pappy Van Winkle raffle is back, and this spring it has a unique addition.

The spring 2025 raffle features a six bottle flight – including a rare bottle of Van Winkle Family Reserve Rye.

The raffle kicks off March 25, and historically all 1,984 tickets sell out. Each raffle tickets cost $100 and are available for purchase at onecause.com. A full 100% of proceeds will benefit families who stay at the Ronald McDonald House when they travel to Louisville for medical care for their children. All programs and services are free of charge to families.

“We intentionally sell 1,984 tickets to commemorate the year 1984, when Ronald McDonald House Charities of Kentuckiana first opened its doors to families,” said Hal Hedley, the organization’s CEO. “These six coveted bottles offered as a group go directly to support sick children and their families.”

Since 2019, the raffle has raised $1.8 million, which has provided 15,353 nights of comfort to families who travel to Louisville for medical treatment for their children.

Julian Van Winkle III signed each bottle for this specific raffle, which adds value as well as bragging rights to this year’s collection. Van Winkle is a long-time supporter of Ronald McDonald House Charities of Kentuckiana and serves as president of Old Rip Van Winkle Distillery. The six bottles collectively have been appraised at more than $13,000.

The 2025 spring raffle will be held at 11 a.m. on May 22 and the winner will receive the full flight of six Pappy Van Winkle bottles, including:

- Old Rip Van Winkle 10 Year (2023)
- 12-Year Old Van Winkle Lot B

Ronald McDonald House Charities of Kentuckiana is raffling six Pappy Van Winkle bottles packaged as a flight.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is March 30. On this date in:

1814: European allies stormed the Paris suburbs after crossing into France from Germany. The next day, the allies marched into Paris and captured it by defeating Napoleon Bonaparte’s forces. The allies forced the emperor to abdicate and go into exile. The House of Bourbon returned to power as the empire fell.

1855: About 5,000 slavery advocates came into the Kansas Territory from Missouri to cast fraudulent ballots and shape its legislature. This election came amid the bloody border battle in the years that led up to Kansas being admitted as the 34th state in 1861.

1959: The 14th Dalai Lama, Tenzin Gyatso, fled toward India from Tibet amid an uprising against Chinese control and fear he would be kidnapped. The Buddhist continued to live in exile over 60 years while he remained Tibet’s spiritual leader.

1981: John Hinckley shot President Ronald Reagan in the chest and wounded three others in Washington, D.C. A jury found Hinckley not guilty in 1982 due to insanity. He was sent to a mental hospital, where he remained for more than three decades before his 2022 release.

1986: Versatile American actor James Cagney died at age 86 on his farm in Stanfordville, New York.

2002: Britain’s Queen Elizabeth, the Queen Mother, died at 101. She was the mother of the reigning British sovereign.

2010: Japanese automaker Nissan Motor Co. announced the world’s first mass-produced electric car would cost about $25,000, once buyers in the U.S. subtracted the $7,500 federal tax credit. Nissan started making the Leaf later that year.

LEADING THE WAY

Cincinnati home to some of the earliest Montessori schools

Jeff Suess Cincinnati Enquirer | USA TODAY NETWORK

Madeline Mitchell spent four years covering the education beat for The Enquirer. She recently moved to a new position writing about women and the caregiving economy for USA TODAY. ● One of Maddie's last stories for The Enquirer tells how a group of Cincinnati parents started up a new Montessori school in just 100 days after Xavier University announced it was changing from the Montessori programming in its Lab School. ● Due in large part to the parents' efforts, Cincinnati Public Schools will open the new Bramble Montessori Lab School in Madisonville this fall. ● That's the Montessori method of education in practice – striving through teamwork and self-motivation to find a solution.

I was asked to help give the historic context of Montessori schools in Cincinnati. I was familiar with the Montessori teaching method, which is taught in both public and private schools in Greater Cincinnati, from pre-K to 12th grade.

But before my research, I had not realized how much Cincinnati was leading the way in Montessori education, going back to the 1960s.

Cincinnati had some of the earliest Montessori schools and public Montessori schools in the country. Xavier's Montessori education graduate program was the first of its kind, and the university's Lab School was a key component of that.

Pioneers of Montessori education such as Hilda Rothschild and Nancy Rambusch introduced to Cincinnati the teaching methods of Maria Montessori.

Montessori, an Italian educator, had developed her pedagogy in Europe in the early 20th century, a teaching method based on hands-on learning led by the children at their own pace. It emphasizes independence and self-directed exploration.

"Basically, Montessori is progressive education with responsible direction," the Cincinnati Post & Times-Star reported when the first Montessori preschool classes were held at Cincinnati Country Day in 1962.

That school, too, was started by parents. They enlisted educator Hilda Rothschild, who had studied the Montessori method in France, to create the classes.

Historian believes 4 distinctive organizational patterns make up city’s history

Jeff Suess
Cincinnati Enquirer
USA TODAY NETWORK

Dan Hurley knows more about Cincinnati history than just about anyone. In his 45-year career as a public historian, Hurley has worked with the Cincinnati Historical Society, written for newspapers and magazines, and spent 36 years on Local 12 (WKRC-TV), with 22 years as host of “Newsmakers.”

He recently published the book “Four Cincinnati and Other Essays,” containing 88 articles from his speeches and Cincinnati Post columns, with topics ranging from local identity to politics, race, immigration and urban planning. All revenue for his book goes to the Cincinnati Museum Center Library and Archives.

Hurley has keen insight into a “big picture” view of Cincinnati history, in which he relates to the past to understand the current world.

We recently had a chat about his book and his view of Cincinnati’s history. Here are some highlights of our talk.

Connecting the past to today

Hurley started out teaching high school history where he learned how to engage students.

“I became convinced that the best way was not to start at the beginning, but to start where people were,” Hurley said. “I think the right way to start is take what’s happening now and put it in context. I absolutely believe that kind of current prompt is the right way to do history in public.”

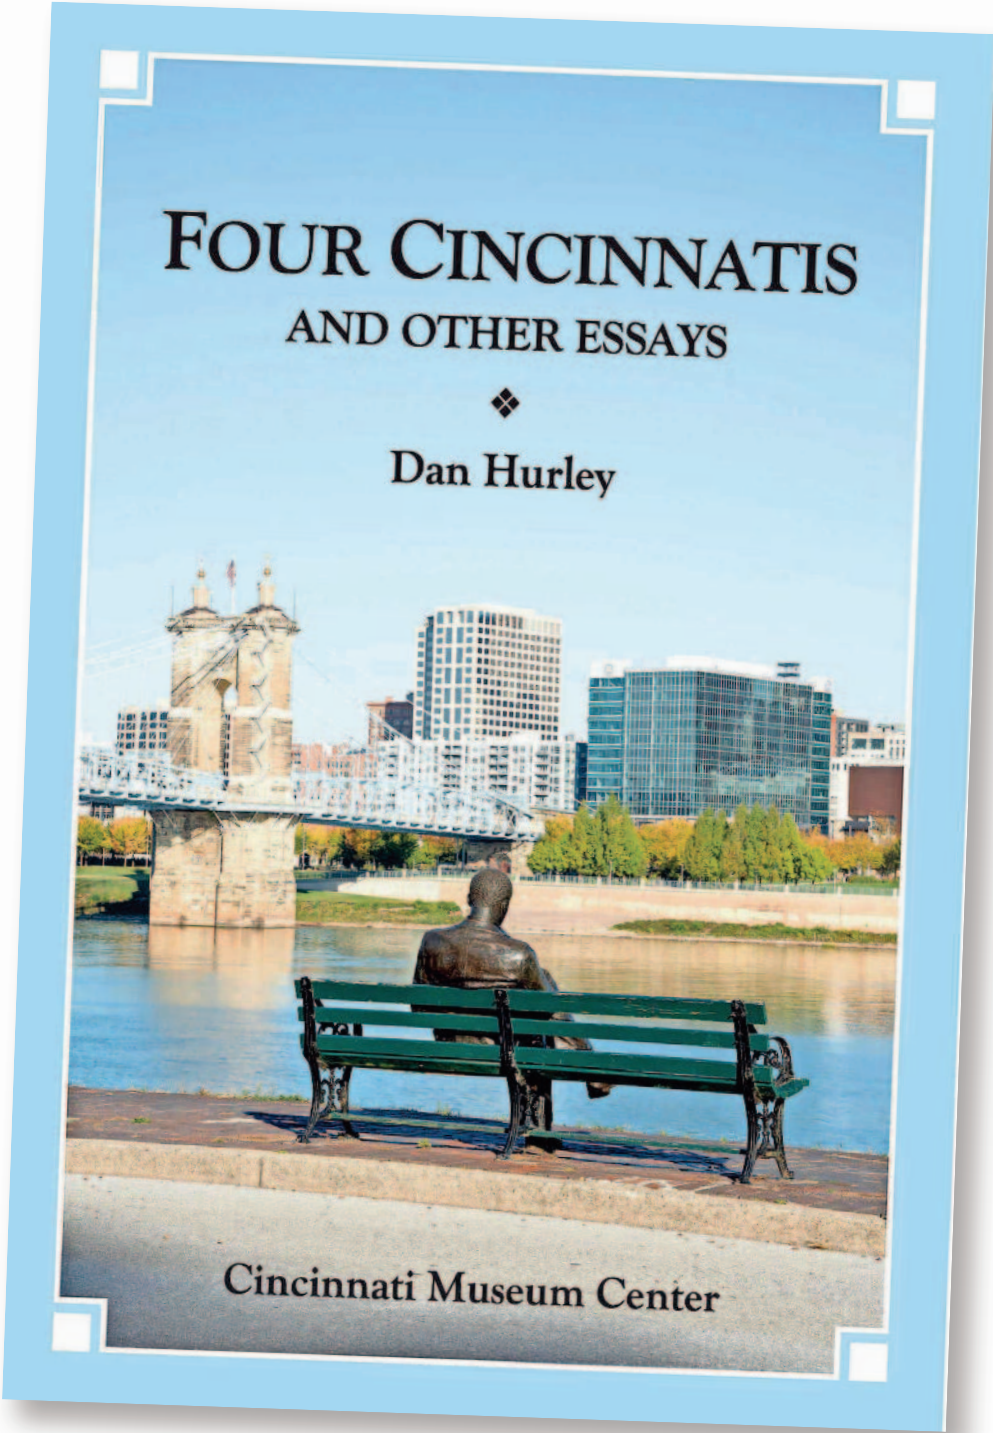

On ‘Four Cincinnati’s

In the featured essay of the book, Hurley explores what he has identified as the four versions of Cincinnati in its history:

- Early decades as a walking city.
- The transformation after the Civil War into a downtown with suburban neighborhoods.
- Fragmentation caused by the 1948 Cincinnati Metropolitan Master Plan and introduction of highways.
- The new digital reality.

“By examining the history of Cincinnati as a case study of a midsized American city, it is possible to identify four distinctive organizational patterns within the city’s economic, social, and political life,” Hurley wrote.

The essay is based on a presentation he has been doing and reworking since 1984 as an overview of the city’s history. For years, it was about three Cincinnati’s, but some things didn’t quite fit his model.

“It hit me when we got in the midst of COVID and suddenly we were all plugged into the digital, virtual world where some people just took off and went to Florida for six months but continued to work online,” Hurley said.

“I realized, wait a minute, we’re heading into a whole new way of organizing human relationships. We’re all going to live in 2-inch squares on a screen. Where time and place doesn’t make as much difference. It only became four Cincinnati’s in 2020.”

How his views have evolved

Hurley wrote the first edition of the great history book “Cincinnati: The Queen City,” published in 1982. He says if he were doing the book now, he would organize it all differently based on how he views the city’s history.

What changed his views?

“I read things I hadn’t read,” Hurley said.

“A couple of key things were really important. One was Steven Ross’ book, ‘Workers on the Edge,’ which looks at that critical moment of industrialization in the 1870s and early 1880s. It’s the most important book that’s ever been written on Cincinnati.

“Also reading something like Robert Putnam’s ‘Bowling Alone,’ which doesn’t have anything to do with Cincinnati but has been incredibly influential on my thinking about social relationships and how the different ways we put together society – in this case, cities – changes the way we can interact with each other. Those changes make a difference in what it means to be human.”

On Cincinnati’s complicated history on race

The largest number of essays in the book are on Black history and confronting racism.

“That’s the rough edge where you really define what the city is or is becoming and that’s where you see the transformation taking place,” he said.

The value of oral history

In graduate school in the 1970s studying to be a social historian, Hurley hardly encountered oral histories. But he has since embraced the value in people telling their stories.

“You can’t understand any specific neighborhood or any process without listening to the people and if you can, listening to the people tell their own story,” he said.

Hurley conducted long oral history interviews with local Black leaders Ted Berry, Judge Nathaniel Jones and William Mallory that were “incredibly influential for me,” he said.

“They shared their outlooks. It transformed how I understand not only the African American experience but the experience of what it means to be a Cincinnati,” Hurley said.

“Also to recognize that stories change depending on who tells them and when they’re telling them and what their goals are. There are certain stories, certain issues I talked to Mr. Berry about multiple times, the same questions, and I got different answers at different times about what he thought it meant. Not so much what happened, but what he thought it meant.

“You realize that history isn’t this fixed thing in the past, and all you’re doing is looking for, oh, what really happened. Nah, that’s not it. What did people think it meant? It’s not what they thought what happened but what they think it meant to us today.”

What’s next

Hurley has a new book due out in April.

“Crossing Borders/Expanding Boundaries: A White Soldier’s Experience of the WWII Segregated Army” is based on his father’s letters telling of his wartime experience, training Black soldiers and helping to liberate the Dachau concentration camp.

Deadline approaches for air travelers to get REAL ID

Alex Perry
Cincinnati Enquirer
USA TODAY NETWORK

Starting in May, Ohio travelers must show a REAL ID to get through airport security.

The U.S. Department of Homeland Security says that air travelers have just over 30 days until airport security begins checking for your REAL ID, a federally accepted form of identification that meets national travel security requirements needed to board domestic flights and access certain federal facilities.

A regular driver's license won't be enough to fly in the U.S., and the Transportation Security Administration (TSA) urges flyers to upgrade to a REAL ID sooner than later. Here's how to get it done before the deadline.

What is a REAL ID? When is the deadline to get one in Ohio?

The deadline to get a REAL ID in Ohio and across the country is May 7, 2025.

The federally-compliant driver license or identification card started off as legislation introduced and passed by Congress 20 years ago and has seen multiple delays over the years.

But TSA will soon require passengers to present their REAL ID, which displays a star in the upper right corner of the ID. If you don't have the REAL ID, you would have to show a valid passport, permanent resident card, or other acceptable identification.

What documents do I need to obtain a REAL ID?

To be REAL ID compliant, the Ohio Bureau of Motor Vehicles recommends getting started early. The BMV says passengers must present documents to prove the following:

- Full legal name
- Date of birth
- Social Security number

- Ohio street address (two documents, from different sources proving Ohio street address that are listed on the Acceptable Document List are required for proof of Ohio residency.)
- Proof of name change (if applicable)

The BMV also has a Compliant Card interactive checklist to help assist with what documents you should bring to a deputy registrar agency.

How much does it cost to get a REAL ID in Ohio?

In Ohio, the REAL ID cards cost the same as Standard driver licenses and ID cards – $24.50 for a four-year license, or $48 for an eight-year card.

Once your REAL ID is processed, you should receive your new card within 10 business days. If you still haven't received it after 28 days, you can contact the BMV online or call 1-844-OHIO-BMV (1-844-644-6268) to check the status of your card.

Where can I go to get a REAL ID in Ohio?

Ohioans can visit any BMV location in the state to present documents in person and call (844) 644-6268 for questions or use the agency's online chat feature.

Do children need a REAL ID to fly?

The BMV says that minor children under 18 who are flying with their parents do not need a Compliant Card/REAL ID, but unaccompanied minors flying commercially will need a Compliant Card or a Standard Card with other federally-approved documentation.

Can you still apply for a REAL ID after the deadline?

While you can still apply for a REAL ID after the deadline, TSA airport security checkpoints will begin enforcing REAL ID requirements in May.

Bengals begins $2.6 million partnership with Miami U.

David Ferrara
Cincinnati Enquirer
USA TODAY NETWORK

The Cincinnati Bengals are going beyond Cincinnati with their newest education partner, Miami University, bringing the school's students and brand closer to the National Football League franchise in a multi-million dollar deal.

The $2.6 million partnership between the Oxford-based school and the Bengals will give Miami students exclusive opportunities with the Bengals through internships, job shadowing and on-campus speakers, among other things, according to a copy of the agreement obtained by The Enquirer.

Miami will also be front-and-center throughout Paycor Stadium as the official university of the Bengals, as well as featured in marketing on the team's website, radio/TV advertisements and social media.

The school will get the opportunity to use Paycor for university events, though specifics on the kinds of events were not detailed in the contract. The Bengals agreed to provide the Who Dey mascot, two Ben-Gal cheerleaders, field access and a stadium tour during limited VIP events with Miami, according to the contract.

Over the course of the four-year partnership, Miami will pay the Bengals an annual sponsorship fee starting at about $614,295 in the first year and reaching $711,125 by the fourth year.

It's possible the stadium could continue as the home of the University of Cincinnati-Miami Victory Bell football rivalry – if it extends beyond the next scheduled game in 2026. In recent years, the two schools have alternated between each of their home stadiums and then Paycor Stadium as a neutral site. But last year, Miami canceled its 2025 and 2028 games, and UC followed by canceling its 2027 and 2029 games.

This is the latest big-money sponsorship between the Bengals and a major organization. It comes on the heels of the team naming Skyline Chili as the 'official chili' of the Bengals last year and partnering with a major Dayton-based nonprofit health organization in 2022.

SAM GREENE/THE ENQUIRER

In that deal, Kettering Health signed a 10-year deal for an undisclosed amount to become the franchise's official health provider.

Miami alumnus founded the Bengals in 1968

School officials pointed to the fact that a partnership between Miami and the Bengals has been a long time in the making.

Franchise co-founder and legendary Hall of Fame coach Paul Brown graduated from Miami in 1930 and is a charter member of the university's "Cradle of Coaches," a title the university carries based on its record of raising professional and collegiate coaches.

Brown spent two years as Miami's starting quarterback before becoming a coach. He was inducted into the Pro Football Hall of Fame in 1967 and was received into the Bengals Ring of Honor in 2021.

Brown led the Cleveland Browns to seven championships in the pre-Super Bowl era before founding the Bengals as an expansion team of the American Football League in 1968.

Get to know mayoral candidate Cory Bowman

Victoria Moorwood
Cincinnati Enquirer
USA TODAY NETWORK

Two months ago, few people would have known Cory Bowman’s name outside of Cincinnati’s West End neighborhood, where he works as a pastor and coffee shop owner.

Now, he’s known across the country as Vice President JD Vance’s half-brother, who is running for Cincinnati mayor.

Bowman, a Republican who lives in College Hill, officially joined the race for mayor last month when he submitted over 700 signatures from Cincinnati voters to the Hamilton County Board of Elections. Democratic Mayor Aftab Purval and Republican Brian Frank also submitted enough signatures, triggering a three-way primary election May 6. The top two vote-getters will advance to November’s mayoral election.

In the weeks since his announcement, Bowman’s name recognition has grown. He’s done interviews, held a campaign kickoff and sold merchandise.

Here are five things we learned about Bowman when he joined The Enquirer’s “That’s So Cincinnati” podcast.

He has nondenominational church where people speak in tongues

Bowman, 36, and his wife started The River Church in the West End in 2020. He said the church’s followers believe in the “prayer language of the Holy Ghost,” which can be heard through speaking in tongues.

Bowman said he was skeptical about the spiritual phenomenon until he experienced it himself.

River Church is nondenominational Christian, a religious sect that’s locally on the rise. Evangelical protestants now make up a larger share of the population in Greater Cincinnati – which once leaned Catholic – than Catholics and mainline protestants combined.

It’s unclear where he stands on LGBTQ+ issues

Bowman wouldn’t give a “blanket statement” on whether he supports the city’s pro-LGBTQ+ policies and said he would need to look at them individually. The current council has voted to support LGBTQ+ residents, including spending $500,000 on healthcare for transgender kids.

JD Vance introduced him to Led Zeppelin

Bowman shared a memory about his half-brother. Vance, then a high schooler, was driving Bowman in his purple Honda Civic and plopped in a Led Zeppelin CD.

He played the heavy rock song “Ten Years Gone,” jokingly telling Bowman: “Don’t tell your mom and dad that I showed you this.”

Bowman said he’s always looked up to Vance as a role model.

“Still to this day, that’s my favorite song,” he said.

He’s invested in the West End

Bowman sees his church and Kings Arms Coffee shop as investments in the West End, a largely low-income, majority-Black enclave just west of downtown Cincinnati. He said he loves the neighborhood’s historic buildings and sense of community. He’s also said he’s against the concentration of low-income housing in the West End and other similar neighborhoods.

“Our church, where we meet, is right by the elementary school,” he said. “You see single moms walking their kids to these schools every day and these kids – they need a shot at getting out of poverty. They need a shot at getting out of the problems that they’re in, and their parents want the same thing.”

He’d make ‘money management’ a priority as mayor

As mayor, Bowman said he would focus on “money management” and supporting developers. He thinks that’s the key to helping businesses flourish.

Cincinnati better than some Ohio cities for allergies

Alex Perry
Cincinnati Enquirer
USA TODAY NETWORK

Spring has officially sprung. The first day of spring is officially here, and with it begins a period of longer days, warmer temperatures, pollen and raging allergies.

More than 100 million Americans suffer from allergies each year, according to the Asthma and Allergy Foundation of America.

Many of those experience seasonal pollen allergies. The foundation unveiled its 2025 allergy capitals report, which ranked the worst U.S. cities for seasonal allergies.

Which Ohio cities have it worst for allergies?

Columbus ranks highest among Ohio cities for allergies

Columbus is the worst Ohio city for pollen allergies in the state, with pollen counts worse than the national average, according to the AAFA findings, which looked at the 100 most-populated metros in the United States. The state capital ranked No. 48 overall and slightly above the national average.

Columbus is no stranger to high pollen levels during the springtime, including over the past several days, according to Pollen.com.

Cincinnati’s seasonal allergy ranks better than the national average

Cincinnatians tend to see a higher pollen count as the spring progresses, and allergy season hits harder around the Memorial Day holiday.

Still, the Queen City ranked No. 88 among 100 cities for worst allergies, with better than average scores for pollen counts and allergy specialists.

Akron’s allergy season is milder than most cities

Coming in last for Ohio’s allergies ranking, Akron was listed among the least challenging cities for allergy sufferers in the report at No. 98 of 100.

Akron scored above average for pollen counts, but spring pollen can still find its way to residents, particularly from late March to early June as grass and tree pollen, including oak, elm, cedar, poplar, mulberry, box elder and maple, hit the air.

Which Ohio cities are the worst for seasonal allergies?

A total of seven Ohio cities made the list overall. Here’s how it ranks, from most severe allergies to the least.

- Columbus (No. 48)
- Toledo (No. 49)
- Dayton (No. 83)
- Cincinnati (No. 88)
- Cleveland (No. 96)
- Akron (No. 98)

In Kentucky, Louisville’s allergies are on par with US average

Louisville, at No. 69, was the only Kentucky city listed in the report. Seasonal allergies are among the national average, but allergy medicine use was found to be higher than average.

Pureval slams ‘stereotypes’ after failed Sundance bid

Randy Tucker and Scott Wartman
Cincinnati Enquirer
USA TODAY NETWORK

Sundance Film Festival’s decision not to move to Cincinnati disappointed but didn’t defeat local leaders who tried to bring the festival here.

The city can land big events, said Mayor Aftab Pureval in a press conference he called Thursday in front of the city’s acclaimed 147-year-old Music Hall.

“We have all of the ingredients to be the next ‘it’ city,” Pureval said. “And it’s my job to know that, and it’s my job to continue to convey that to the rest of the world.”

Those who hoped the prestigious festival would pick Cincinnati also expressed a similar optimism. The festival picked Boulder, Colorado, to be the festival’s new home beginning in 2027. Pureval and others said they were proud Cincinnati was one of three finalists, the other two being Boulder and the festival’s current home, Park City/Salt Lake City, Utah

Mayor doesn’t know why city didn’t get picked

Film Cincinnati President Kristen Schlotman called Pureval Thursday morning to tell him the city lost the bid. Pureval said he then spoke with Sundance officials, who didn’t give him a reason why the city didn’t get the bid.

“They really just emphasized there’s a reason why, out of all the cities in the country, Cincinnati was in the final three,” he said. “And it’s because of our investment in the arts. It’s because of our vibrancy, our walkability.”

The Sundance Film Festival is the largest independent film festival in the United States. It had been held in Park City since 1981.

Sundance Institute’s Board of Trustees, in a statement, gave a little insight into the rationale.

“Boulder offers small-town charm with an engaged community, distinctive natural beauty, and a vibrant arts scene, making it the ideal location for the Festival to grow,” the institute said in a statement.

In a press release announcing the finalists, the Sundance Institute said candidates for the film festival’s new home were assessed on their “ethos and equity values, infrastructure, and capabilities to host the festival.”

DeWine: ‘We put together a world-class package’

One of the big differences in the proposals, however, was the Colorado legislator’s commitment to $34 million in tax credits over 10 years to attract the film festival to Boulder.

Ohio Governor Mike DeWine, in a statement, said the region had a competitive bid. DeWine met with the enthusiastic supporters, community resources, and venues that impressed many associated with the film industry,” DeWine said in the statement. “Sundance’s interest in Cincinnati continues to show that both Cincinnati and the State of Ohio have the attention of major events, industries, and businesses seeking great places to locate.”

Pureval ‘disgusted’ by Variety article

While Sundance officials gave city leaders positive feedback, some of the national stories about the city’s pursuit of Sundance rankled Pureval. On Wednesday, a story in Variety quoted unnamed film directors, publicists and executives saying the city lacks hipness and isn’t iconic rankled Pureval. Pureval said he was “disgusted” by the Variety article and others over the last year.

More cities look like Cincinnati than the other cities Sundance was considering, Pureval said.

“It’s been really hard for me to bite my tongue as national media outlets continue to publish stereotypes and misconceptions, the backward thinking, just a lack of self-awareness from people on the coast about Cincinnati,” Pureval said. “Cincinnati looks like the country.”

Many see bright future for Cincinnati

On Thursday, as Cincinnatians celebrated Opening Day for the Cincinnati Reds and Major League Baseball, they chose to focus on the positives that came out of the push to land the nation’s largest independent film festival.

The city united and made a great case for the festival, said Josh Heuser, co-founder of the city’s popular light festival Blink and the underground bar and theater Ghost Baby.

Heuser was one of the many art and business leaders who publicly supported bringing the festival to Cincinnati.

Even though he supported bringing the festival here, the city will be fine without it, he said.

“I don’t think we need to focus on outside entities or perspectives to tell our story,” Heuser said. “We’ve got a homegrown story right here, there’s creative things happening here I believe, on the level on Sundance or higher, including Blink.”

During the city’s Opening Day parade, people outfitted in Cincinnati Reds gear seemed mildly disappointed the city lost out. Residents, such as Fritz Hollmeyer, who lives in the city’s Mount Auburn neighborhood, said he would have liked to have the festival in the city.

“Cincinnati definitely seems like the perfect place for it. We have so many theaters in town,” Hollmeyer, 37, said.

Those in Hollywood who think the city isn’t hip enough don’t know what they’re talking about, he said. “They’ve probably never been here.”

Chamber, business community reacts

Brendon Cull, president and CEO of the Cincinnati USA Regional Chamber, commended the Cincinnati arts community, particularly Film Cincinnati and its president, Kristen Schlotman, for their passion and commitment to bringing the film festival to the Cincinnati area, despite coming up short.

“Without question, Kristen and the team at Film Cincinnati made the best case and organized an incredible bid,” Cull said in a statement. “We’re proud of who we are in Cincinnati, and while Sundance is going to stay in the mountains, we’re going to thrive, grow and continue to support all that makes Cincinnati a great place to live and visit.”

The business community was proud to have finished in the final three.

“We are, of course, disappointed that the Sundance Film Festival community will not experience our unique blend of hospitality by hosting Sundance in our community,” Julie Calvert, president & CEO of Visit Cincy, and Julie Kirkpatrick, president and CEO of meetNKY, said in a joint statement. “We are incredibly proud of how our community came together to demonstrate our capability to tackle ambitious initiatives and host world-class events. This effort has proven that Cincinnati is a serious contender on the global stage, and we are excited for the more exciting opportunities that lie ahead.”

Madeline Mitchell
Cincinnati Enquirer
USA TODAY NETWORK

Marta Hyland knew she wanted to pursue Montessori education for her children well before they were old enough to go to school. She and her husband did their research, toured several schools around Cincinnati and landed on Xavier University Montessori Lab School seven years ago.

Hyland still remembers visiting the school for the first time, before her oldest son started preschool there. She loved it.

Montessori schooling encourages students of different ages to learn together, puts a strong emphasis on building community and promotes child-led learning and hands-on projects.

“This is exactly what we were looking for,” she remembers thinking.

Hyland’s son is in fourth grade now, and she has a second grader and a kindergartner at the Montessori school on Xavier University’s campus. So when the school abruptly decided to drop its Montessori programming for next school year, she was devastated.

The announcement was a shock to Hyland and dozens of other parents at the lab school.

These families had carefully chosen Xavier for its Montessori tradition, spent thousands of dollars each year to send their children there and had developed strong relationships with the school’s teachers.

Instead of focusing on their anger, though, Hyland and dozens of other lab school parents and teachers rallied together to come up with a solution. They scheduled meetings, formed committees and reached out to surrounding Montessori leaders to find a new home where their students and staff could “land together.”

Within 100 days, they found one.

“It was a lesson in Montessori,” Heather McCarren, another parent, said about how their new Montessori school, in partnership with Cincinnati Public Schools, came together so quickly. “It’s teaching children through action.”

A lost legacy of Montessori education

The reputable lab school at Xavier was established in 1966 and has a tradition of training Montessori teachers who go on to serve students in Cincinnati, across the country and even in faraway countries in Europe and Asia. Lab schools like this one are often located on university campuses and offer undergraduate students studying to become teachers a chance to experience working in a classroom.

Cincinnati is known as a Montessori mecca in large part because of Xavier’s undergraduate program and lab school. But that’s about to change.

In November, the university announced its lab school would no longer feature Montessori programming, leaving Hyland’s family and more than 100 other students in a lurch. The biggest blow, Hyland said, was that the lab school’s teachers wouldn’t be rehired because of Xavier’s move to a traditional pedagogy.

“They’re the heart of the school,” Hyland said.

president for marketing and communications, confirmed lab school teachers weren't guaranteed employment for next school year "given the pivot in the school." But he said the lab school's positions are always yearly contracts, and that the university will continue to encourage current teachers to apply for the reimagined lab school.

Xavier cited several reasons for the shift, including financial ones. There aren't enough undergraduate students interested in Montessori to justify the lab school anymore, Ruschman told The Enquirer. Most college students pursuing education seek traditional classroom experience, he said, and so the lab school will transition to a traditional Jesuit Catholic model in the fall.

"While we have certainly been recognized and known as a leader in Montessori education," Ruschman said, "the reality (is) interest in being a Montessori teacher has fallen off pretty steadily over the last decade."

Ruschman said Xavier made the decision after months of planning and gathering feedback from teachers and parents. But parents who spoke with The Enquirer said they never wanted to do away with Montessori, and Montessori teachers from around the world who trained at Xavier are heartbroken that the lab school is changing.

Xavier is one of the few places in the country where you can get a teaching degree hand-in-hand with Montessori certification, said Jill Bonken Doyle, a Montessori teacher in Colorado. She went to Xavier in the late 1990s and later got her master's degree there. She helped start one of the first public Montessori schools in South Carolina.

Observing how Montessori works through the lab school is an integral part of learning how to be a Montessori teacher, Doyle said. And because so many Montessori teachers come from Xavier's program, she expects this change to impact Montessori communities across the country.

"I'm just really sad that Xavier doesn't see that they offer an amazing opportunity for Montessori teachers," she said. "And that, I guess, that they don't value it."

Montessori parents get to work

The week after Xavier notified parents about its new vision for the lab school – which came in an email on Election Day – parents and teachers met to figure out possible solutions.

At least 50 joined for an initial meeting at the Civic Garden Center of Greater Cincinnati where they discussed how to start a new school, whether that be a homeschooling group, a new private school or reaching out to Cincinnati Public Schools.

"I think we all kind of rallied at that meeting," McCarren said. "And it was very clear to me at that meeting that this community was not defined by that school building. That this community could go somewhere else."

At first, parents were excited about creating a new private school. But the more they looked into it, Hyland said, the more daunting that seemed. There were also discussions with The Norwood Montessori School. And then, two-and-a-half weeks after Xavier announced it was dropping Montessori, members of the parent group met with Cincinnati Public Schools Superintendent Shauna Murphy.

"It became very clear," Hyland said, that Cincinnati Public Schools was the best option.

"They were very eager from the very beginning to help us," McCarren said.

Members of Murphy's team went to the lab school to observe classes and make sure that the district could provide the education these parents were seeking.

"No question," Murphy said. "Through those conversations, we realized, 'Yeah, I think we can make this happen.'"

The district chose its Bramble Nature Campus in Madisonville to house the new Montessori school because there are only a few preschool classes at that building, and it has room to serve many more students. There's a cafeteria, a gym and even a stage at Bramble – features Xavier's lab school doesn't have.

Things began to move "at lightning speed," McCarren said. The Cincinnati school board voiced support for the new Montessori school at a December board meeting, and in mid-February the district hosted an enrollment event exclusive to Xavier lab school families at the Bramble Nature Campus.

It was exactly 100 days since the parents first met on Nov. 13 to figure out how to move on from Xavier's lab school and still get their kids the kind of education they loved.

"It really speaks to the Montessori element," McCarren said. "It was a way to teach our children how to make lemonade when life gives you lemons."

Cincinnati Public Schools is talking with the lab school's teachers, too, to help them apply to work for the district. Student enrollment has since opened up to other Cincinnati families.

Xavier's switch hard on incoming eighth graders: 'There were tears'

More than 100 of the 158 students currently at Xavier University Montessori Lab School are enrolled at the Bramble Nature Campus for next school year, according to Cincinnati Public Schools.

But some parents are still unsure of what to do next. Xavier's reimagined lab school takes students only up to sixth grade, so families with incoming seventh and eighth graders are especially stressed.

Emily Carlson went through Xavier's teacher training program as an undergraduate student and spent lots of time learning at the lab school. Now, her daughter is a seventh grader there.

"It's been wonderful, and she's loved every second of it," Carlson said.

TIMELINE
Montessori education in Cincinnati

Cincinnati has been at the forefront of Montessori education in the U.S. Some of the earliest schools to teach the Montessori method have been in the Queen City, and Xavier University has been training Montessori teachers for 60 years. Here are some key dates in Montessori education:

1907

Maria Montessori, an Italian educator, opens the school Casa dei Bambini (translated as Children's House) in Rome. There, she introduces her methods for teaching children, focused on self-directed education and hands-on teaching, which becomes known as the Montessori method.

1911

The first Montessori school in the United States opens in Tarrytown, New York.

1962

Hilda Rothschild, a pioneer Montessori teacher who escaped Nazis in France, opens the first Montessori preschool class in the Midwest at Cincinnati Country Day School. Classes at Summit Country Day start the following year.

1965

Montessori classes are introduced at Findlay Street Neighborhood House in Over-the-Rhine under the auspices of the Cincinnati Community Action Commission and supported by the Federal Anti-Poverty Act.

1965

Rothschild creates a master's degree program in Montessori education at Xavier University. It is the first Montessori teacher training program anywhere in the country. Xavier's Montessori Lab School opens the following year.

1970

The New School Montessori, a private elementary school, opens in North Avondale under the guidance of Rothschild.

1975

Sands Montessori Elementary School, originally called Children's House, opens in Mount Adams as the first public school in the U.S. to use the Montessori method. The program was designed by Nancy Rambusch, who had founded the American Montessori Society.

1979

The three Children's Houses in Cincinnati, in Mount Adams, at Oyler Elementary School in Lower Price Hill and at Heberle Elementary School in Over-the-Rhine, merge as Sands Montessori in West End.

1997

Clark Montessori in Hyde Park joins Cincinnati Public Schools as the first public Montessori high school in the nation.

2023

The Cincinnati school board adopts a Montessori curriculum certified by the American Montessori Society for its seven public Montessori schools (five elementary schools and two high schools).

2024

Xavier announces its Montessori Lab School will switch to an "innovative lab model" in fall 2025.

2025

CPS will open the new Bramble Montessori Lab School in Madisonville to fill a need with Xavier's Lab School dropping Montessori programming.

It really speaks to the Montessori element. It was a way to teach our children how to make lemonade when life gives you lemons."

“This woman was stabbed.” • Butler County Prosecutor Michael “Mike” Gmoser reads matter-of-factly from a crime novel he wrote. • In his office here, about 30 miles north of Cincinnati, Gmoser narrates the scene after criminals posing as paramedics recover a pregnant woman from a car crash, abduct her, force her into an ambulance and cut her baby out of her. • Gmoser, a Republican, has been Butler County’s prosecutor for 14 years. He and his staff of assistants present criminal cases against defendants and advocate for victims, among other duties.

They’ve seen some brutal cases in Butler County. Gmoser prosecuted Daniel French, who was found guilty of aggravated murder in the 2012 killing of Barbara Howe, an 87-year-old woman living in a Monroe retirement community.

He also prosecuted a Lebanon man who was convicted this year after he ordered the execution-style killing of Asiah Slone, whose body was found in a trash can in Middletown.

After Gmoser’s work-day prosecuting real-life criminals, the 79-year-old goes home to write about fictional cases of murder and kidnapping.

He isn’t some creep obsessed with murder or the stereotypical aloof writer. Gmoser is outgoing and chatty. He jokes that the only thing silent about him is the letter “G” in his name. His blue eyes light up when he recounts stories from his countless interests (flying airplanes and paragliding, to name a couple). And a conversation with him is often punctuated by his friendly laughter. He’s long been interested in writing books, especially given his experience as a trial lawyer who seeks to accurately tell the story of a crime.

Gmoser has completed two books so far. The section Gmoser is reading aloud in his office is from his second book, “Spencer’s Law,” published in 2021. He wrote his first, “The Farrier’s Son,” a few years earlier.

Both books follow Spencer Tallbridge, a man who becomes the fictional Rutledge County prosecutor, as he uncovers the truth in criminal cases.

Spencer, in part, is inspired by Gmoser’s own life.

Starting to write

The bookshelves in Gmoser’s office are lined with framed pictures. There’s a photo of him in a 1958 Corvette he fixed up. Another photo shows him and a Beechcraft Bonanza, the high-performance, single-engine aircraft he flies.

One is of Gmoser and his late wife, Olga Gmoser, both with large smiles.

“She could never find anything bad about anybody,” he says.

Olga died from cancer in 2014. When Gmoser was recovering from losing her, he turned to creative pursuits. He started playing drums to fill the quiet in his house. He also began weaving the threads of a book plot in his head.

Two years later, with the entire book outlined in his mind, he began writing “The Farrier’s Son.” On Gmoser’s laptop (which he calls his “typewriter”), he created the story of Tallbridge.

It was published in 2017.

The plot was based on evidence from cases and personalities in his life, he says. Gmoser hasn’t worked on cases that are the same as those in his books. But aspects of the overall fictional narratives are based in reality.

A theme in both books – the strong influence of a father – is also drawn from Gmoser’s life.

Gmoser says his father, Al Gmoser, exemplified confident decision-making. Gmoser proudly shared a story of when his father was a United Airlines captain. He was a “brilliant aviator,” his son says.

A copy of “Spencer’s Law,” Gmoser’s second novel.

Michael “Mike” Gmoser

Fiction meets real life

In the early 1950s, Gmoser’s father was flying from New York to Chicago and saw bad weather coming in. He called dispatch and said he was going to deviate from the path and land in Michigan. Dispatch pushed back and told Gmoser’s father that other planes were still flying into Chicago.

Gmoser says his father replied: “I’m not. I’m not going to chance it. There’s a tornado coming. And I’m not going to kill these people.”

Dispatch said, “Well, you’re going to have to answer for that.”

He said, “I’ll answer for that.”

According to Gmoser, his father and passengers landed, but the other guy didn’t. He was torn apart by a tornado. Everybody was killed.

“Having that type of authoritative demeanor was something I learned from my father,” he says. For Spencer to have the same experience felt right to Gmoser.

Spencer’s father is a farrier, or someone who shoes horses. He taught Spencer the “country wisdom” the assistant prosecutor uses to navigate cases.

In “Spencer’s Law,” Spencer is now the county prosecutor and struggles to navigate a moral dilemma, so he calls his father. Spencer has to decide whether to assault an FBI agent he believes is crooked to potentially save the kidnapped baby. If he’s wrong, and the FBI agent isn’t a crook, Spencer would be in big legal trouble.

His father encourages Spencer to make his own decision but reminds him, “The real measure of a man is not what he acquires or the comfort of his life. The measure is how well he can live with himself with the decisions he makes.”

Ultimately, Spencer’s decision pays off for him.

Do you want to start writing?

Gmoser tells anyone interested in writing books to write what you know.

He also recommends being involved in as many disciplines as you can, saying it’s “fertile ground” for ideas.

Gmoser lives this truth. He does scuba diving, deep-sea fishing, paragliding and beekeeping. He was previously a medical malpractice lawyer. And, of course, he flies planes.

Much of this feeds into his writing. He draws on his extensive medical knowledge during the ambulance scene. His aviation knowledge is key in a riveting scene in “Spencer’s Law.” And he understands how the legal system works.

With all these hobbies (and his legal career), one might ask: What does he plan to do when he retires? Well, Gmoser says with a smile, he doesn’t plan on retiring anytime soon.

But he does plan to keep writing. He pulls a thumb drive out from his desk drawer, and a wide grin spreads across his face. He says, “This is the third book.”

JUST ASKIN’

Is village of St. Bernard named after dog breed?

Bebe Hodges Cincinnati Enquirer | USA TODAY NETWORK

The Enquirer’s Just Askin’ series aims to answer the questions that no one seems to have an answer for, not even Google.

Statues of St. Bernard dogs are all over the Hamilton County village that shares a name with the breed.

They’re in front of the fire department, schools and the local government building.

The village of St. Bernard was incorporated in 1878. Were the village’s 300 residents back then that obsessed with dogs to name their community after them? (If so, we don’t blame them, but it seems unprecedented.)

Question: Is the village of St. Bernard actually named after the dog breed?

Answer: No. But there is a connection!

The village’s name is explained in the book “Fifty Years of Progress, 1878 St. Bernard, Ohio 1928” and a 1949 newspaper article, which the St. Bernard-Ludlow Grove Historical Society shared with The Enquirer.

Both sources point readers, first, to Switzerland. In 962, Bernard de Menthon, who became a Catholic saint, built two hospitals in the Alps.

Monks ran the hospitals and took care of travelers with the “most generous and kindly hospitality,” the book reads. These hospitals became known as the Great and Little St. Bernard, in honor of their founder.

Now, early settlers of what would become St. Bernard, Ohio, saw the area’s hills and its view overlooking the Mill Creek Valley. They were reminded of the Alps. The settlers thought of the Swiss monks’ hospitality and compared it to the kindness of the early residents in the Ohio area.

So, they chose “St. Bernard” as the community’s name!

Now, here’s the dog connection. The monks bred dogs to rescue travelers lost in the mountains. This dog breed was later named – you guessed it – the St. Bernard.

Montessori

philosophy behind Montessori rests on building leadership skills. At the Montessori lab, eighth graders got the chance to prove their leadership abilities not only in their classes, but also as leaders for the whole school.

“She is bummed about losing out on that,” Carlson said of her daughter. They were still weighing options on a school for next year when Carlson spoke to The Enquirer in late February. But Carlson said she was heartened by the way the school community rallied together to make the Bramble campus a reality.

McCarren’s daughter is also going into eighth grade this fall.

“It was a shock and a disappointment” to lose her last year of leadership at the lab school, McCarren said, but she’s glad the Bramble option allows continuity for others.

Cliff Adams said rumors that the lab school was in jeopardy have circulated since his son started going to school there five years ago. But none seemed threatening to him until the fall of 2024. When the university invited parents to attend focus groups to discuss upcoming changes, Adams signed up.

But instead of listening to parents and really engaging with them, Adams said, it seemed like the university representatives had already made up their minds.

Suddenly, the Montessori programming that Adams had sought out for his son was going away. He’d put five years and about $40,000 into the program – a program he said served his son, Stefano, very well – and now that Stefano had just one year left before high school, his son felt a massive loss.

Stefano, 13, found out about the changes at school.

When Adams picked him up from school that day in November, he said Stefano “came out disheveled.”

“There were tears, you know,” Adams said. “It’s an emotional thing.”

Stefano is musically gifted and Adams was already considering putting him in Cincinnati Public Schools’ School for the Creative and Performing Arts for ninth grade. Luckily, it turns out switching over a year early might make things easier.

But that doesn’t mean Adams’ angst against Xavier has dissipated. He said there’s “no way” any of the families who have been through this experience would sign up for the reimagined lab school, or even want their child to go to Xavier later on for college.

“It still, obviously, leaves a sour taste in my mouth,” Adams said.

‘The future of Montessori is really bright’

Xavier would not say how many applications they’ve received for their new Jesuit Catholic lab school, recently named St. Peter Faber Academy, which started accepting applications in December. The university announced the school’s changes with pride: the school is “slated to become the Midwest’s first and nation’s second Jesuit Catholic lab school,” a December news release reads.

The reimagined lab school is for preschoolers and elementary students. The university hopes to enroll about 160 students. Half of those seats are reserved for the children of Xavier employees and students, who all get a 10% tuition discount, as do Xavier alumni.

“As we respect and honor the rich tradition of the current Montessori Lab School, our new vision poises the school for sustained growth, stronger alignment with Xavier’s mission, and greater opportunity for the University’s students and faculty to make a difference at the lab school,” Rachel Chrastil, university provost and chief academic officer, said in the news release in December.

Ruschman said the university is happy that Montessori parents landed at Cincinnati Public Schools.

“We know many of our Xavier graduates work in Cincinnati’s local Montessori schools and hope this provides our current Montessori majors with an additional opportunity for experiential learning,” he said. “And, St. Peter Faber Academy will now be a place where the largest (majority) of our education students will have an opportunity for hands on experiences right here on the Xavier campus.”

Despite her disappointment in Xavier, Carlson said she’s heartened by the fact that Cincinnati Public Schools took on the Montessori lab school. She thinks the move will make Montessori even more accessible to people who want to learn about it.

Murphy is excited, too. Cincinnati Public Schools has a 50-year history of providing Montessori education to students, and is home to the oldest public Montessori school in the country, Sands Montessori. In the past, the district has sent teachers seeking Montessori credentials to Xavier. Now, they’ll be able to train staff in-house.

“I think the future of Montessori is really bright,” McCarren said. “It will be brighter because of this move.”

Blue Ash ranked among best places to live in US

Chad Murphy

USA TODAY NETWORK

One Cincinnati suburb is among the best places to live in the nation, according to a recent ranking, while several other Ohio and Kentucky communities rank nationally in other categories, such as the best places to buy a house or raise a family.

The rankings – produced by Niche, which bills itself as “the market leader in connecting colleges and schools with students and families” – are based on the quality of local schools, crime rates, housing trends, taxes, employment statistics and more using data from the U.S. Census Bureau and other sources.

Here’s how Ohio and Kentucky communities fare.

Cincinnati suburb Blue Ash ranks in the top 50 places to live in America

Blue Ash, a city of 13,374 residents northeast of Cincinnati, came in at No. 31 on Niche’s best places to live in America ranking. It is the only Ohio or Kentucky community in the top 50. This ranking attempts “to measure the overall quality of an area” by looking at the quality of local schools, crime rates, housing trends, employment statistics and access to amenities.

According to Niche, Blue Ash is home to many young professionals and retirees, and “offers residents a dense suburban” area with many bars, restaurants, coffee shops and parks. The public schools are highly rated.

The city’s median home value of $365,700 is above the national median value of $303,400, and 66% of residents own their homes. Likewise, the median household income in Blue Ash is $116,663, above the national median of $78,538.

The top five cities on the list are:

1. Colonial Village, a neighborhood in Arlington, Virginia
2. Atlantic Station, a neighborhood in Atlanta
3. Chesterbrook, a suburb of Philadelphia
4. Harbour Island, a neighborhood in Tampa, Florida
5. City Center, a neighborhood in Red, White & Blue Ash returned to Summit Park on July 4, 2022, with multi-platinum artist Gavin De Graw as the featured artist fireworks from Arthur Rozzi Pyrotechnics. Ohio, Kentucky communities named among Niche’s best places to buy a house

Four communities in Ohio and Kentucky rank among Niche’s best places to buy a house. Key factors in this ranking, per Niche, include home values, taxes, crime rates and the quality of local schools.

Canfield in Mahoning County, near Youngstown, was the top in the region at No. 28. The city offers a “sparse suburban feel,” and the public schools are highly rated. The median home value is $225,100, and 85% of its 7,651 residents own. The city’s median income is $97,730.

South Russell, a suburb of Cleveland in Geauga County, came in next at No. 36. It offers residents a rural feel with highly rated public schools. The median home value there is $414,700, and 98% of its 3,972 residents own. The median income is $166,481.

Verona, in Boone County, Kentucky, about 30 miles from Cincinnati, ranked No. 47 on Niche’s list. The community of 1,196 people offers a rural feel with good schools. The median home value of $331,100 is above the national value of $303,400, and 96% of residents own. The median household income of $121,250 is also above the national median of $78,538.

Loveland Park, a suburb of Cincinnati, came in at No. 50. The Warren County community of 1,697 offers a rural feel with many parks and highly rated schools. It has a median home value of $243,600, with a 95% ownership rate. The median income is $116,919.

The top five places to buy a house, per Niche, are:

1. Havel Green, a town in Alabama
2. Sturgeon, a suburb of Pittsburgh
3. Madison, a suburb of Huntsville, Alabama
4. St. Johns, a town in Arizona
5. Jena, a town in Louisiana

Three Ohio communities among the best to raise a family

In this category, Niche attempts “to measure the appeal of an area for families” by looking at the quality of schools, safety, affordability and access to amenities. Three Ohio communities landed in the top 50.

Mariemont, a village east of Cincinnati, came in highest for Ohio at No. 16. The community offers a dense suburban feel where many families and young professionals live. It has many bars, restaurants, coffee shops and parks, as well as highly rated schools. The median home value is $584,400, and 73% of its 3,477 residents own. The median income is $153,507.

South Russell appears again at No. 32 on this list.

Pepper Pike, a suburb of Cleveland, rounds out the Ohio communities at No. 47. The city of 6,807 in Cuyahoga County has a rural feel with good schools. The median home value is $558,300, and 96% of residents own. The city’s median income is $215,373.

The top five overall are:

1. Chesterbrook, a suburb of Philadelphia
2. Kensington, a suburb of New York City
3. Penn Wynne, a suburb of Philadelphia
4. Hinsdale, a suburb of Chicago
5. Haworth, a suburb in New Jersey

4th grader finds froggy formula

Madeira student was first to solve math puzzle about jumping on lily pads

Jennie Key Cincinnati Enquirer | USA TODAY NETWORK

Madeira Elementary School’s fourth-grade teachers recently presented a tricky unsolved math puzzle to their students to help develop mathematical reasoning. • Joseph Burke, a student in Megan McKee’s class, was the first student in history to solve it. • The problem, Jumping Frogs, came from MathPickle.com – a free online resource of original mathematical puzzles and games for teachers from kindergarten through 12th grade. • Jumping Frogs kept student mathematicians across the country hopping for about nine years before Burke wrestled out the solution.

What’s MathPickle?

Started by mathematician Gordon Hamilton in 2010, MathPickle also presents puzzles that have never been solved to elementary math students. Most students gave up on the problem with the thought others had tried for nine years, so it must be impossible – but Joseph Burke kept coming back to it. Eventually, he was pretty sure he had solved it and sent his solution in a letter to Gordon Hamilton, saying, “My name is Joseph Burke. I’m a fourth grade student at Madeira Elementary, and I am pretty sure I have solved your jumping frogs ...” “My favorite subject is math, and I liked your video because it was challenging, and I love challenges. Do you think I did it? Please write back.” They sent Hamilton a video of Joseph’s solution and asked him to write back. Hamilton replied in a YouTube video, saying, “I tried to solve that one myself for a long time, and I could not do it – so that was epic that you got it. Congratulations!”

More than math

The teacher and the puzzle creator agreed that solving the problem required more than excellent mathematics skills. “After who knows how many failed attempts, he finally reached a beautiful, never-been-done-before solution and proved the whole idea of growth mindset and grit that we’ve been trying to teach our students all year – nothing is impossible, it just hasn’t been found yet,” McKee, his teacher, said. The following week, Hamilton took it a step further, making a virtual visit to chat with Joseph’s class to celebrate his success and present their classroom with a brand new puzzle. Hamilton plans to post the video of Joseph’s class watching his epic solution on his website.

Who is Gordon Hamilton?

Hamilton, who lives in Alberta, Canada, is also a designer of board games like Santorini and puzzles like you’ll find on MathPickle.com. He founded MathPickle.com in 2010 to inject new ideas into the classroom. “Students call me Dr. Pickle,” he said on his LinkedIn profile. “There is nothing I enjoy more than stumping students and having them stump me.” “MathPickle is also developing a range of curricular puzzles. These help teachers with their number one challenge: ‘How to engage the full spectrum of student ability?’”

Problem solving rules the room

Hamilton loves numbers, but he is pretty sure long division or memorizing multiplication tables is not helping youngsters learn the most important thing math can do for them: encouraging thinking and problem solving. “Elementary students learn more from playing board games than doing a worksheet,” he said. And having parental interaction and eye contact with their children is a bonus.

The teacher had priorities right

Hamilton said he loved that McKee made the puzzle-solving a win for the whole class. “It is good for the other students and how she handled this was perfect,” he said. “Failure teaches tenacity.” And Burke didn’t give up. And everyone in the class learned it’s possible to succeed. Even when doing hard things.

Gala for Literacy raises record $380,000 for Queen City Book Bank programs fundraiser

The Queen City Book Bank hosted its annual Gala for Literacy: One for the Books fundraiser in February at the Hard Rock Casino Cincinnati. More than 330 guests helped set a record by netting over $380,000 for QCBB’s literacy programs. For the second year in a row, QCBB announced an anonymous donor would match all gifts up to $150,000 during the event and through the end of February. The evening celebrated the students, teachers, volunteers and supporters who work together to make the QCBB programs a success. Throughout the evening, guests bid on rare bourbon, designer handbags and unique experiences and enjoyed raffle prizes including an all-inclusive trip to a Dreams Resort or Secrets Resort, Tiffany & Co. jewelry, Cincinnati Reds Diamond Club seats and more.

Carol Williams, former WCPO news anchor, QCBB volunteer and board member, served as the emcee for the event. A key moment of the evening was the speech by John Otten, co-founder and executive chair of Brave Like Me. Otten discussed the power of the domino effect, illustrating how small actions can lead to significant outcomes. He emphasized how a child’s ability to read can shape their future and reminded everyone that, when we unite, we have the power to create meaningful change within our community.

Seven surprise awards were made to those dedicated to serving the QCBB’s mission throughout the year: John Busam (Extra Mile Award), C-Change Class #59 (Partners in Progress Award), ArtWorks and Loren Long (Community Builder Award), Noah Borgemenke with Bearcat Buddies (Adopt-A-Book/Adopt-A-Future Award), Dick Rosenthal (Literacy Trailblazer Award), Katie Kinzeler and Joshua Halliwell (Educator of the Year Award), and QCBB’s group of dedicated Tuesday volunteers dubbed the “Fab Four” – Laura Babcock, Jan Howard, Connie Perme, Karen Reiber (Volunteer of the Year). Save the date for next year’s Gala for Literacy on Thursday, Feb. 26. WCBDD to host free accessible egg hunt on April 12

The Warren County Board of Developmental Disabilities will host a free egg hunt for children with disabilities at 2 p.m. on Saturday, April 12, at the Miracle League Field in Springboro, located at 1605 S. Main Street. The event welcomes children ages 17 and under with developmental disabilities, as well as their siblings. Arts and crafts will be available to participants starting at 1:30 p.m., and visitors are invited to explore the accessible playground at the Miracle League Field. The egg hunt will commence promptly at 2 p.m. Approximately 1,500 eggs filled with toys, candy and prize tickets will be scattered about the Miracle League Field. Participants are encouraged to bring a basket to collect eggs and a camera to capture memories. The Easter Bunny will be making a special appearance to pose for photos and hand out prizes.

The Miracle League Field is accessible to individuals who use walkers or wheelchairs. New this year, some eggs will be attached to balloons, making them easier for people to reach and collect without needing to bend down. The Warren County Board of Developmental Disabilities supports more

COLUMBIA TUSCULUM

Carnegie Art Center of Columbia Tusculum launches event to raise organ donation awareness

To connect people to the spirit of local nonprofit missions, the Carnegie of Columbia Tusculum will host its first “Community Acts” program featuring “Unforgettable Stories of Organ Donation” on Friday, April 4, at the Carnegie Arts Center of Columbia Tusculum, 3738 Eastern Avenue in Cincinnati.

Intergenerational collaborators will weave together a tapestry that includes waiting organ transplant candidates, living donors, health experts, artists, writers and folk musicians alongside organizational partners, including Origin-ary Arts Initiative, Urban Appalachian Community Coalition (UACC), Off the List and Network for Hope. This intentionally festive blending of personal testimony, artistic expression and practical information emphasizes a shared community value for the positive, even life-saving impacts that community storytelling forums may have on individual lives. While 90% of Americans express support for organ donation, only a little over half of those citizens sign up as potential donors, perhaps due to uncertainty about the facts. Nonprofit representatives from Off the List and Network for Hope will explain how the organ donation process works, with a special focus on the 90,000 Americans in need of a life-saving kidney transplant.

Local resident Anna Curvin, a former physical therapist who now volunteers part-time at UACC’s Frank Foster Memorial Library in Lower Price Hill, has been on that list for three-plus years, waiting for a donor. Daily struggles have not shaken her belief that making genuine connections with people through neighborhood service and storytelling gatherings will eventually lead her to healing. As the newest program in the Carnegie Center of Columbia Tusculum’s Braiding Community event series, “Community Acts” enlivens the spirit of nonprofit organizations for local residents through vividly shared missions, personal experience stories and inspiring arts performances. People of all ages are invited to come a few minutes early to enjoy homemade snacks and conversation. Doors open to the public at 6:10 p.m. Admission is free with optional (no pressure) donations welcome. ShotSpotter technology is used to pinpoint gunshots in designated high-crime neighborhoods, including this area on the East Side. It relays the information about shots fired to police, often before 911 calls come through. PHOTOS BY DORAL CHENOWETH/COLUMBUS DISPATCH ‘Invaluable tool’ to fight crime worth cost?

Columbus set to pay more than $6M for ShotSpotter tech, but some experts say it’s ineffective

Shahid Meighan
Columbus Dispatch
USA TODAY NETWORK

The occupants inside a home in Columbus’ Driving Park neighborhood descended into chaos when bullets began tearing through the house in November. A 2-year-old boy inside with his family was struck by a bullet. It took more than 90 seconds before someone was able to dial 911 from the 900 block of Ellsworth Avenue.

But thanks to multiple microphones hidden throughout the East Side neighborhood, Columbus police knew about the shooting before anyone reported it. Responding officers were quickly able to render aid until medics arrived, ultimately helping save the toddler’s life, public safety officials say.

The hidden acoustic sensor microphones are part of the ShotSpotter gunshot detection system, which can detect gunfire and notify police within about a minute. The silent sentinels have been placed in locations designated by the city in the Linden and Hilltop neighborhoods and the Parsons Avenue corridor on the South Side since 2019, and in Near East Side neighborhoods since 2021. The Wedgewood Apartments were added in 2023 in response to regular gun violence and multiple homicides there.

“It’s an invaluable tool,” said George Speaks, deputy director for the Columbus Department of Public Safety. “I wish we had the (financial) resources to expand into other areas that could benefit from this technology.”

But some criminal justice experts and researchers say that the detection system is expensive and ineffective at preventing gun violence.

“Something like ShotSpotter is more of a Band-Aid; it’s a small component. The response times can be quicker, but it doesn’t address the root cause of gun violence,” said Terrance Hinton, a criminal justice and sociology professor at Ohio State University.

A Dispatch analysis of data obtained from the city Department of Public Safety found that ShotSpotter issued 14,209 alerts of gunfire between 2022 and 2024. About 2% of those alerts resulted in an arrest.

Additionally, for those same years, police reported recovering 175 firearms from ShotSpotter alerts, and only about a fourth of those alerts led to police filing incident reports where shell casings were found. The Department of Public Safety said there could be many reasons that shell casings may not be recovered, such as if the shooter used a revolver.

Experts have also warned that the lack of regulatory guardrails over police technology like ShotSpotter in the hands of police departments leaves it open to possible abuse and mismanagement.

Columbus extends commitment

SoundThinking, the California company that owns ShotSpotter, estimates the average annual cost of the gunshot detection system at between $65,000 and $90,000 per square mile.

Columbus will pay about $886,430 this year to cover about 12.6 square miles of the city’s 224 square miles. Each of the four areas covered is about 3 square miles while Wedgewood Apartments is six-tenths of a mile.

Speaks acknowledged that ShotSpotter is expensive and said the cost is a roadblock to expanding it to other areas of Columbus.

As part of the city’s gun violence reduction strategy, Columbus City Council unanimously approved without discussion a three-year extension in February for Thell Robinson, founder Columbus-based nonprofit Halt Violence that works with at-risk youth and young adults to stop violence without involving the police. He is skeptical that ShotSpotter is preventing any shootings. “... you got cameras on every avenue, and that’s not a deterrent,” he said.

ShotSpotter gun detection equipment on a utility pole in Columbus’ Clintonville area.

ShotSpotter for the original three areas from 2019. The contract includes an increase to $73,500 per square mile for those coverage areas.

By the end of that extension on Feb. 6, 2028, the city will have spent more than $6 million over nine years with SoundThinking. That does not include additional money to renew the Wedgewood Apartments contract, which expires next year.

Based on the 12.6 square miles covered by the system and the more than $6 million encumbered by the city on the system so far, Columbus will have spent more than $476,000 for each mile of coverage through 2028.

Hinton said that there are benefits to ShotSpotter, such as faster police response times, which data provided by the police division show are from 6 to 8 minutes. He also cited the detection system’s role as an investigatory tool when police can recover evidence of shootings.

While city leaders have touted a 17% decline in homicides last year, Hinton pointed out that neither the mayor nor Columbus police credited ShotSpotter as a contributing reason.

Hinton also noted the years 2020 through 2023 when Columbus saw record-breaking numbers of homicides, the majority of them committed with firearms.

“(ShotSpotter) should be more of a complementary tool in addition to other things that reduce violence, like investing in community and after-school programs,” Hinton said. “But relying on the technology by itself doesn’t work.”

Residents question ShotSpotter costs, transparency

Community members who spoke with The Dispatch said they have a general understanding of how ShotSpotter works and think it can be an effective tool for police responding to gunfire. However, many said they weren’t sure if it’s helping Columbus police solve gun crimes or preventing gun violence.

Jasmine Ayres, 34, a community activist who has lived in North Linden for two years, said while there may be some benefits to ShotSpotter, she questions its value.

“I can guarantee you that (community members) prevent more shootings than ShotSpotter,” she said.

Ayres also said Columbus police have not been transparent enough when it comes to the ShotSpotter technology, mainly the locations where they are placed and whether it helps prevent gun violence or solve gun crimes.

Columbus police and SoundThinking officials declined to confirm to The Dispatch the location of any of the devices, citing concerns that vandals would try to damage the expensive equipment.

Ayres said she would like to see some of the millions earmarked for ShotSpotter go toward community initiatives that she believes get to the root of violence – such as the Columbus CARE Coalition and Columbus police’s Mobile Crisis Response for people

Akron police goat chase on Route 8 goes viral thanks to Stephen Colbert

Fugitive the goat has gone from the headlights of state Route 8 to the spotlight of late-night TV. The goat’s profile has been growing since Akron police engaged in a highway chase with the goat the night of March 14. Police received numerous calls about a goat on Route 8 near Tallmadge Avenue at about 9 p.m., according to a Facebook post by the police department. Officers were able to catch the goat and found it had no tags, chips or any markings that would indicate ownership. Officers wrangled the goat into their vehicle before a local rescue group stepped up to help. The goat was later named “Fugitive,” the police department wrote. According to a Facebook post by Rubber City Rescue, Fugitive is doing well despite the ‘baaaaad’ encounter. It’s currently at a farm in Norton. “The Late Show With Stephen Colbert” on Monday night mentioned the police department’s goat encounter and shouted out a local Akron food truck. “Clearly the goat was going to take Tallmadge west then hang a right on East Cuyahoga Falls Avenue then another right on Elma to get to El Malecon Mexican Grill. I mean chimichangas for 10 bucks — she’s a goat, she’s not an idiot,” said Colbert. — Akron Beacon Journal experiencing mental health crises.

Thell Robinson, founder of Halt Violence, a Columbus-based nonprofit that works with at-risk youth and young adults to stop violence without involving the police, expressed skepticism that ShotSpotter is preventing any shootings.

“Is it a deterrent for shootings? No. Hell, you got cameras on every avenue, and that’s not a deterrent,” Robinson said.

Robinson said he’d be interested in seeing more data from Columbus police showing how often they have been able to rescue a person shot, seized weapons and made arrests because of a ShotSpotter.

Ralph Carter, founder of We Are Linden, told The Dispatch that he thinks ShotSpotter is a worthwhile investment and that he, along with other community members, would like to see it expanded into other parts of Columbus.

Like Robinson and others, however, Carter said he couldn’t say for sure if ShotSpotter was helping Columbus police solve gun crimes.

At the same time, Carter said that he would always advocate for more funding for programs and initiatives focused on violence prevention.

Brian Steel, president of Fraternal Order of Police Capital City Lodge #9, which represents Columbus police and other area law enforcement departments, said he supports ShotSpotter and believes city residents want it.

But he thinks city leaders and law enforcement should be more transparent with the community about where the microphones are located, and he disagrees with the rationale of keeping the locations of the microphones hidden.

“I’m not aware of people looking around for ShotSpotter before doing a drive-by (shooting),” Steel said.

ShotSpotter successes don’t include reducing gun violence

While ShotSpotter has had noticeable successes, it has not led to a reduction in gun violence.

From 2020 to 2024, homicides in Columbus have fluctuated, reaching a peak of 205 in 2021 – two years after ShotSpotter was implemented in the three areas. Additionally, homicide numbers from 2020 to 2024 remain higher compared to pre-pandemic homicide numbers in the 2010s. More than 80% of homicides in 2023 and 2024 were committed with guns, according to data from Columbus police.

Whether ShotSpotter has helped police solve more gun crimes is also unclear.

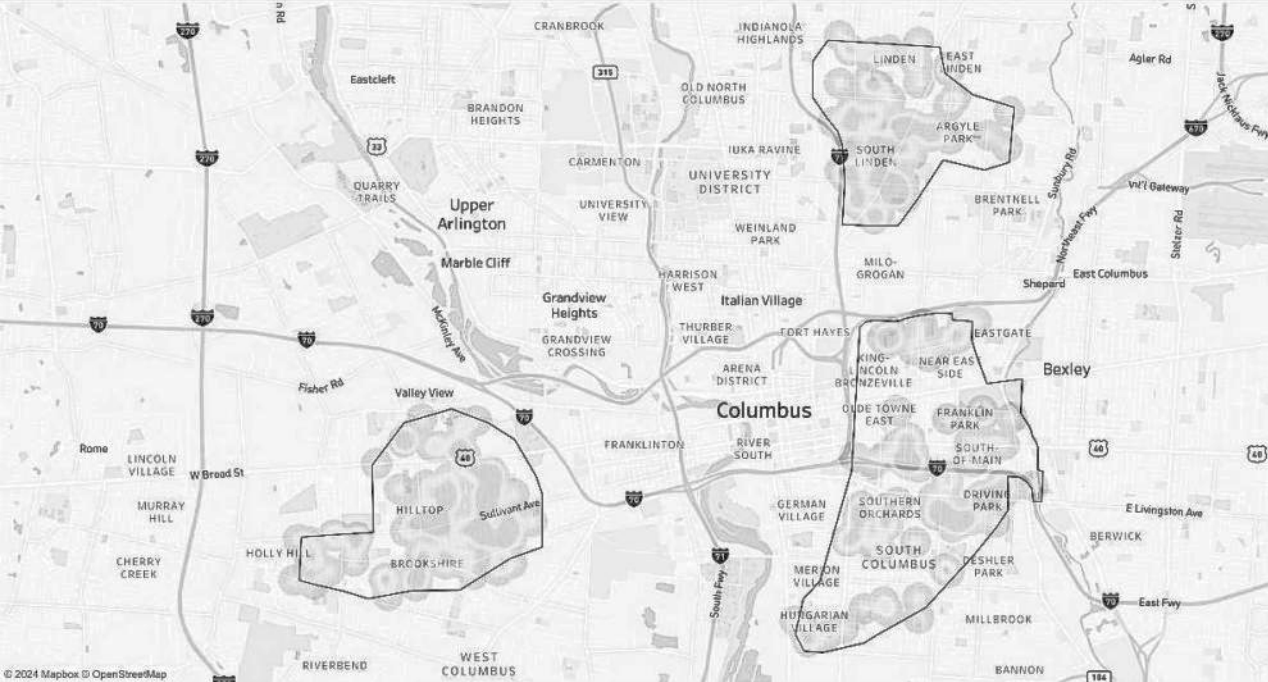

For example, in 2022, Columbus police had a 33% solve rate out of 1,300 reported felonious assaults, and nearly 80% of the assaults were committed with firearms. Columbus police data for that year doesn’t show how many cases of assaults from shootings were solved. Columbus police were able to recover 50 firearms with the help of ShotSpotter that same year.

In 2023, Columbus police solved 27% out of 1,013 non-fatal shootings, and ShotSpotter helped police recover 71 firearms connected with shootings and felonious assaults. In 2024, the solve rate for shootings ballooned to 46%, but police recovered 54 firearms with the help of ShotSpotter.

Columbus police did not maintain data on felonious assault solve rates for 2020 and 2021, according to a records custodian for the division. Columbus police said that the solve rates couldn’t necessarily be attributed to ShotSpotter.

In an interview with The Dispatch, Thomas Chittum, senior vice president of forensic services at SoundThinking and a former agent with the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms, and Explosives, said that nationally, around 80% of gunfire isn’t reported to police, what he calls an “average statistic.”

Most experts in the criminal justice field do agree that a large percentage of gunfire goes unreported to police. The Department of Public Safety estimates that 88% of gunfire in Columbus is not reported to police.

Nick Konves, an assistant chief with Columbus police, said that investing in policing technology like the gunshot detection system helps police stay ahead of crime.

Konves explained that ShotSpotter alerts are treated as a Priority 2 call for officer response. But if police receive a corresponding 911 call reporting that a person was shot – as occurred with the mass shooting of four people in a drive-by shooting on Feb. 27 on the city’s East Side – then it is upgraded to a Priority 1 call, prompting a faster police response.

Mike Katz-Lacabe, director of research for the Center for Human Rights and Privacy, a privacy research group based in California, told The Dispatch that these types of technologies are often meant to appear as though law enforcement agencies and city governments are taking public safety and gun violence seriously, even if they don’t necessarily work as they’re promised.

“No police department wants to be the department without the newest toy,” said Katz-Lacabe.

Both Hinton and Katz-Lacabe also said that city government leaders face pressures to show their constituents they are taking crime seriously, especially when there are spikes in homicides and violent crime, and when residents want to see what they believe are immediate results.

ShotSpotter’s Chittum acknowledged that gun violence is a complex social issue and that addressing it would take a “comprehensive and holistic approach,” something that ShotSpotter cannot do on its own.

“Can you show me a single piece of technology that does reduce violent crime? There is no such thing. If there was, we should put all our money into that thing,” said Chittum.

Columbus police, SoundThinking defend ShotSpotter placements

Activists have criticized SoundThinking for most often placing ShotSpotter’s microphones in poor communities of color, with some saying it amounts to over-surveillance that can lead to over-policing.

In Columbus, ShotSpotter’s microphones are placed in areas with a large population of people of color, except for the Hilltop area, according to population data from the U.S. Census Bureau.

“It’s a double-edged sword,” Hinton said. “While it can decrease (police) response times, it can also lead to over-policing in areas that are already heavily policed, and it can cause conflict when there wasn’t anything there to begin with.”

Speaks, the deputy director of the Department of Public Safety, said the department relies on historical crime data when deciding where to place the ShotSpotter microphones. Specifically, Speaks said they look at rates of violent crimes like felonious assaults, homicides, and armed robberies.

A Dispatch review of crime data in Columbus for the past five years shows that the majority of homicides in the city during that period have involved Black victims and Black suspects, with the majority of deaths from gunfire.

“We are stats driven, and we want to put technology and tools with the goal of reducing violent crime in those areas” said Assistant Chief Konves. “That is solely how we use the data we have to place ShotSpotter – to make the communities better and help us solve violent crime.”

SoundThinking has denied accusations of targeting communities of color with ShotSpotter microphones. Chittum said that the decision where ShotSpotter microphones are placed is completely up to the Columbus Department of Public Safety.

He also pointed out that people of color tend to be the victims of gun violence more often in comparison to other groups, and that they deserve to be protected, too.

“Everyone knows gunfire does not affect all of America the same way. Why wouldn’t you apply a resource in that place where it can do the greatest good?” asked Chittum.

Bryce Peterson, an adjunct professor at John Jay College of Criminal Justice in New York City, said that police departments have to balance public safety for those communities without over-policing.

“There’s two ways to look at it: Now we’re over-surveilling poor communities. On the other hand, for a myriad of reasons, more crime is located there, and police departments do have an obligation to make those communities safer,” Peterson said.

In response to critics, Columbus Assistant Chief Smith Weir said there are “struggles” between the academic world and law enforcement when it comes to crime prevention. He said it often isn’t practical for police departments to take the time to develop a control group and take years to test out crime prevention strategies before implementing them to see if they work.

“We can’t sit there and say we’re only going to do ShotSpotter in this one area, (and) we’re only going to do interventionists and violence interrupters in this area, and we’re only going to do another program in this area,” Weir said. “We don’t have the luxury of doing a control (group).”

State health department confirms measles outbreak has hit Ohio

Samantha Hendrickson
Columbus Dispatch
USA TODAY NETWORK

Ohio officially has a measles outbreak, the state health department has announced.

Ten people in Ashtabula County in northeast Ohio have measles cases, the Ohio Department of Health (ODH) said Wednesday in a news release. Nine of the cases are linked to an unvaccinated man reported last week as the state's first measles case of 2025.

There is also a confirmed case in Knox County, where a "visitor" exposed others to measles in Knox and nearby counties.

None of the individuals infected with the highly contagious disease were vaccinated.

"Given the measles activity in Texas, New Mexico, and other states around the country, we're disappointed but not surprised we now have several cases here in Ohio and known exposure in some counties," said Dr. Bruce Vanderhoff, ODH director.

"This disease can be very serious, even deadly, but it is almost entirely avoidable by being properly vaccinated," Vanderhoff said. "Measles is especially dangerous for young children, so I strongly urge all parents across Ohio to make sure your children are vaccinated. It is a crucial layer of protection that can save lives."

Measles cases nationwide in 2025 have already surpassed 2024's total case count. The latest data from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention show 378 people in 18 states have been diagnosed with measles. The outbreaks are primarily in Texas and New Mexico.

The CDC defines a measles outbreak as three or more related cases. Measles can spread quickly, and each case can lead to an additional 12 to 18 cases if people aren't protected against the disease.

Vaccination rates down in Ohio spark deep concern

Local health officials warned that it was only a matter of time before measles reached Ohio, especially given Ohio's "alarming" decline in childhood vaccinations in the state.

Vaccine rates for measles, mumps and rubella – commonly known as MMR shots – in kindergartners dropped in Ohio from 89.2% in the 2023-2024 school year to 88.3% in the current school year, according to ODH's recent school immunization report.

In 2022, Ohio had 90 measles cases, with 85 of those being in central Ohio.

Louisville President Schatzel steps down

Killian Baarlaer
Louisville Courier Journal
USA TODAY NETWORK

Kim Schatzel has resigned as the president of the University of Louisville effective immediately after roughly two years serving as the institution's president, officials announced Wednesday.

"The University of Louisville Board of Trustees thanks Dr. Schatzel for her two years of service, which have seen her build a team that has increased enrollment and retention and grown the university's reputation as a research powerhouse," board chair Diane Medley said in a statement. "We wish Dr. Schatzel well in her future endeavors."

The board voted – without opposition – to name Gerard "Gerry" Bradley, previously UofL's executive vice president and university provost, as her successor effective immediately.

"With this opportunity and the team we have in place, we can take UofL to new heights," Bradley said.

During a news conference following Bradley's appointment, Medley said the board is confident that Bradley is fit for the job of president and felt that naming him as the permanent president rather than opening a national search was the best option for the university.

"In this case, we were very fortunate to already have someone in place, Dr. Bradley, who was so well suited for what we needed for the next stage that we felt like it was in the best interest of everyone to go ahead and name him as president so he can hit the ground running," Medley said. "It was more of a logical decision rather than a departure from precedent."

The university will pay Schatzel $400,000 outright plus an additional $300,000 in six monthly installments as part of her separation, according to a term sheet provided by the university.

Schatzel's departure comes in a year of record-breaking enrollment and retention rates at UofL. Enrollment at the university for the 2024-2025 academic year reached an all-time high of 24,073 students, including its largest-ever freshman class, according to a news release from last fall. Student retention rates also reached a university record of 81.5%.

The university garnered more than a half billion dollars in funding from the Kentucky legislature during the 2024 legislative session, Schatzel and the board said in a joint statement following the announcement.

Medley said the board was pleased with UofL's relations with the Kentucky legislature and other programs initiated under Schatzel's administration but alluded to shifting goals between her and the board.

"With any position, times change. The goals of Dr. Schatzel changed, our goals changed, and we were very fortunate to have the ability to name Dr. Bradley, who had already been here so we wouldn't lose any momentum," Medley said.

Bradley arrived at UofL in 2016 as the dean of the School of Dentistry. He said the opportunity to become president arose in the past several days.

On March 18, the University of Cincinnati announced Bradley was chosen as the university's new executive vice president for academic affairs and provost, but in a March 25 announcement, UC President Neville Pinto said the university will reopen the search to fill the role after learning that Bradley was "pursuing other opportunities."

"From the outside it may look like it was abrupt, but conversations go on all the time. This board is very involved with the leadership of this university," Medley said.

Schatzel became UofL's 19th president in 2023. She arrived in Louisville from Maryland's Towson University, where she helped grow the university into the largest in Greater Baltimore.

Her higher education experience also includes stints as interim president, provost and executive vice president of academic and student affairs at Eastern Michigan University and as dean of the University of Michigan-Dearborn College of Business.

Ohio House passes bill to ax coal fees, attract new energy generation

Jessie Balmert
Enquirer Statehouse Bureau
USA TODAY NETWORK

Lawmakers agree: Ohio must create more energy to avoid blackouts and high electric bills while still powering new data centers and technology.

But they have slightly different ideas about how to attract new energy generators to Ohio while cutting the fees that consumers currently pay.

During a Wednesday debate on the House floor, lawmakers focused on fees tacked onto Ohioans' electric bills for two coal plants, including one in Indiana.

"This is the last pillar of the largest scandal in our state's history," said Rep. Josh Williams, R-Sylvania Township, referencing a pay-to-play scheme that sent former Ohio House Speaker Larry Householder to prison for 20 years. "An industry is going to understand when you get caught, not making a bad deal but bribing an official, these members in the House are going to work hard to remove any benefit you got."

But not everyone was convinced. Former Speaker Jason Stephens, a Kitts Hill Republican who represents the area where the Ohio plant is located, said it was "totally unfair" to end the coal plant fees immediately. Rep. Don Jones, R-Freeport, said the coal plant fees should continue – or at least give companies time to adjust.

After that debate, lawmakers in the Ohio House of Representatives passed House Bill 15, 90-3, which aims to tackle many of the state's energy policy problems. The Ohio Senate unanimously passed a different proposal, Senate Bill 2, last week.

Both proposed laws have faced dozens of revisions and could face several more before any sweeping energy policy is delivered to GOP Gov. Mike DeWine's desk.

What would House Bill 15 do?

The House's sweeping energy bill, sponsored by Rep. Roy Klopfenstein, R-Haviland, would:

- Eliminate fees on Ohioans' electric bills for two coal plants, including one in Indiana. Ohioans have already paid more than $670 million for the two Ohio Valley Electric Corporation coal plants, which are owned by several utilities, since 2017, according to an Ohio Manufacturing Association report. Eliminating the fee would save Ohioans $591.4 million through 2030, according to a fiscal analysis. In committee, lawmakers rejected an amendment that would have ended the OVEC fees on Dec. 31, 2026, instead of immediately. Committee chairman Adam Holmes said Ohioans couldn't afford to extend the deadline. "We have to speak for them."
- End a solar energy generation fee, which has collected more than $60 million from Ohioans. Most of that money hasn't been spent, according to Cleveland.com. The House plan would give Ohioans refunds for these fees. Both fees were included in a 2019 law, called House Bill 6, which also included a $1 billion bailout for nuclear plants. That law was at the heart of a federal investigation into corruption at the Ohio Statehouse.
- Reduce taxes on property owned by new energy generators from 24% to 7%. Existing power plants would be taxed the same, alleviating a concern from local school boards that they would lose money.
- Reduce taxes on new transmission and distribution property from 88% to 25%.
- Require more scrutiny of fees added to Ohioans' electric bills by eliminating electric security plans, which tack on charges that receive less review from utility regulators.
- Require utilities to refund fees once the Ohio Supreme Court finds them unlawful, imprudent or improper. The refunds would start when the court issues a decision, not when they were first applied.

"Today is a big win for the pocket-books of Ohio," said Rep. Sean Patrick

Brennan, D-Parma.

How are the House and Senate bills different?

Both bills want to improve access to energy in Ohio and protect ratepayers. But they approach them in slightly different ways.

Those changes must be hashed out before DeWine can sign these policies into law.

Speaker Matt Huffman, R-Lima, said those conversations will happen next month, but both chambers agree: "We're not subsidizing directly utilities anymore."

Those differences include:

- Tax rates. Senate Bill 2 would eliminate the tangible personal property tax, which is assessed on business property, for energy first generated in 2026 or later. The House bill would tax it at 7%.
- What happens with solar fees already collected. The House would refund customers. The Senate proposed giving the money to schools to improve their energy efficiency.
- New ideas. The House version would create a Community Energy Pilot Program, which would allow customers to opt into smaller, local projects for solar, wind, natural gas generators, biomass, hydroelectric or fuel cells.
- Where anaerobic digesters can be placed. The Senate version would allow county commissioners, zoning appeals boards, township trustees and municipal councils to decide where these tanks that break down waste, manure and other organic matter.
- Thermostat control. A last-minute Senate change would allow consumers to receive a $40 annual credit from their utility if they give the utility access to their smart thermostat so it can be adjusted from one to three degrees during peak energy hours and do not override it more than 50% of the time.

Columbus district changes student profiles to birth names

Cole Behrens
Columbus Dispatch
USA TODAY NETWORK

Columbus City Schools has changed the names and genders of transgender and gender-variant students this month to their name and sex assigned at birth in district systems after the district dropped its transgender policy to comply with state law.

According to the district and a letter sent to families, parents no longer have the ability to change their student’s name or gender in district systems, and existing changes have been reverted to the student’s original name and gender assigned at birth.

Dara Adkison, board secretary of advocacy group TransOhio, said that Columbus City Schools is the only district in the state to have made this decision. Adkison that the change will mean real harm for transgender and gender-variant CCS students.

“To make that decision to uproot those students lives and take that sense of choice and agency away from them was cruel and harmful,” Adkison said.

In February, the CCS board rescinded its policy regarding transgender and gender-variant students in order to comply with a new state law after weighing whether to defy the law.

The new Ohio law, Senate Bill 104, requires K-12 and college students at public and private schools to use bathrooms and locker rooms that match their sex assigned at birth. It also bans multi-occupancy, gender-neutral restrooms and prevents transgender students from sharing overnight accommodations with peers of different biological sex. Ohio Gov. Mike DeWine signed the law in November and it took effect in January. The law does allow single-occupancy, gender-neutral restrooms.

When the CCS board voted to rescind the policy, transgender students and advocates in the room broke into applause after saying during public comment that rescinding the policy was the best way to support transgender students in light of the new law.

However, the rescinded policy also contained provisions pertaining to student gender identity, and the related administrative guidelines also contained information about how students and families could change the name and gender of a student in the district systems.

A letter sent to affected families, obtained by The Dispatch, said that families will no longer have the option to change a student’s gender or name. The letter also said that a student’s name and gender in Infinite Campus, the district’s student and parent portal, “will now match the information on the student’s birth certificate or other official record.”

“Parents may access Infinite Campus through the Parent Portal and list an alternative ‘nickname’ for their student if they so choose,” the letter to families said.

The now-former district policy stated that when staff or an administrator is required by law to provide a student’s legal birth name or sex assigned at birth, they should “adopt policies avoiding the inadvertent disclosure of such confidential information.” The former policy also said the portion of student records relating to transgender students’ preferred names and pronouns should be considered confidential and restricted.

In a statement, the district said that in order “to ensure legal compliance regarding official student records, Student Information System records had to be updated to match the information on student birth certificates or court orders.”

The district did not respond to inquiries about whether teachers would still be able to refer to students by their preferred name or gender identity.

Adkison said that there is “nothing proposed in the state house or at a federal level that would necessitate this kind of change.”

“And when we are in the climate we are in where there is such intense hatred being shouted from the rooftops by a very vocal few, we don’t need our allies, our schools, anyone to be trying to champion more discrimination,” Adkison said.

Adkison said that TransOhio has been contacting CCS and trying to understand the decision-making behind the change and is hoping that the district will revert the change.

“Just because harm was done doesn’t mean that the district has to stick with this choice, they have the conscious decision to change it back,” Adkison said.

“And yes, harm is done no matter what, but they don’t have to stay with this change.”

Sherrod Brown forms nonprofit to advocate for workers’ rights

Haley BeMiller

USA TODAY NETWORK

When Sherrod Brown left the U.S. Senate last year, he promised to continue his fight for American workers.

The former Ohio senator announced his next steps Monday: A nonprofit that aims to highlight the plight of workers and push Republicans and Democrats to enact policies that benefit them.

“People believe both parties have betrayed them,” Brown told reporters

Monday. “They think Democrats are the party of betrayal and Republicans are the party of rewarding the rich. I want workers to feel like they have a home in both parties, both parties are addressing their concerns, and it’s pretty clear they aren’t.”

Brown unveiled his Dignity of Work Institute months after losing reelection to Republican Sen. Bernie Moreno, as President Donald Trump cruised to an 11-point victory in Ohio. The campaign shattered spending records for a non-presidential race, but Brown ultimately couldn’t overcome the headwinds against him and his party.

The Dignity of Work Institute will conduct research to examine the concerns of workers and policies that hurt and help them, according to a news release. In its first survey, the organization found that many Americans juggle multiple jobs and believe the economy and political system are inhibiting their success.

It’s unclear whether Brown’s future ambitions extend beyond the institute. He hasn’t ruled out a run for Ohio governor or Senate next year. He and his wife, Connie Schultz, are moving to the Columbus area, but Schultz said they’re doing so to be closer to family.

Brown told the New York Times he’s still debating whether he wants to run for office again.

“I don’t know what I’m going to do in the future,” Brown said Monday, “except I’m going to be focusing on raising money and hiring and gathering information and more data about workers for the Dignity of Work Institute.”

GREEN MEANS GO

Go can mark the beginning of something great. Sometimes, it represents the end—the end of doubt, the end of procrastination.

Go is a fresh start, but it’s also starting over.

That’s the beauty of Go: it can be found in your mistakes and in your maybes.

Go is momentum, moving forward, and the spirit to make things happen.

Go isn’t reserved for the go-getters. Go is for anyone who wants it, trusts it, and believes in the infinite possibilities of saying “yes” to what comes next.

For many, it begins with a giant leap of faith, but for most of us, Go requires tentative baby steps.

When you’re ready to Go, you need a bank that helps you get where you’re driven to be—one who’s with you for the twists, turns, and detours. When you see LCNB, you see green.

And Green Means Go.

No red tape. No red lights. Just our firm belief that your finances should power your future, not slow it down.

CONTENT 2025 CREATORS

David Wysong, Haadiza Ogwude, Grace Tucker and Kaycee Sloan
Cincinnati Enquirer/USA TODAY NETWORK

Cincinnati is chock-full of talented content creators, from drone videographers to bakers to food reviewers. • In January, The Enquirer asked its readers to vote on Cincinnati's Top Content Creators of 2025. • The top 50 nominees have since been cut down to the final eight, selected partially by reader votes (more than 36,000 of them!!!) and partially by an Enquirer panel. • The final product is a collection of people who indirectly serve as ambassadors for Cincinnati, showing the world what the Queen City has to offer. • These are Cincinnati's Top Content Creators of 2025. David Wysong

Sarah and Mitko Karshovski were living in Mexico when they decided they wanted to highlight all the positive corners of Cincinnati.

Mitko immigrated to the Queen City from Bulgaria when he was around 11 years old. He then met his wife, Sarah (a Detroit, Michigan, native), at Miami University. After traveling for about seven years, they decided they wanted to move back to Cincinnati and put a spotlight on the areas they felt deserved more love.

And with that, Cincy Scoop was born (after asking ChatGPT for some unique name ideas). The husband-wife-duo began sending out email newsletters featuring “good news in the Queen City” in April 2023. They started posting frequently on social media throughout 2024.

The Cincy Scoop Instagram account has since skyrocketed, amassing over 60,000 followers, thanks to its Reels and posts on things to do and places to go in the city.

Here are more things to know about Cincy Scoop’s power couple.

What is it like working with your spouse?

The duo met at Skipper’s Pub & Top Deck near Miami University in 2014. A mutual friend went to introduce them, but Sarah was only worried about getting the Jimmy John’s sandwich she ordered.

“My first words to Mitko were, ‘I don’t have time for this. I have a sandwich on the way,’” Sarah said.

Mitko (of course) persisted, and they married in 2020.

When launching Cincy Scoop together, they wanted to combine their skills, as they both have content and social media backgrounds. Mitko and Sarah also had experience working remotely, so they knew they could work in the same space together.

“We’re very used to working together, but just not on the same thing,” Mitko, who also works full-time as a digital community strategist, said.

He added that communicating well with each other has been the key to their success. “I think we have very different strengths, and ... sometimes the tension of strengths is actually a good thing. Sometimes we’re going to disagree, and actually in that disagreement is where the good stuff happens.”

Sarah, who has has worked full-time on Cincy Scoop since October, said the biggest challenge is not letting the business become the relationship.

“(We try to find) times where we’re saying ‘hard cutoff, we’re not talking about Cincy Scoop tonight,’” she said.

“I’ll say that sometimes, and I’ll be the one to break it. He has to remind me, so it’s just keeping each other in check.”

‘Why doesn’t anyone else know about what’s going on here?’

Some content creators hide, or at least don’t highlight, where they are from, but that’s not the case for the Karshovskis. The cornerstone of their mission is to spotlight the unique culture existing in Cincinnati.

“We traveled full time for seven years,” Mitko said. “We would come back here at least once a year, and every time we got these snapshots of how the city was changing.”

“We have a lot of pride about the fact that we live in Cincinnati, and it’s this constant feeling of like ‘Why doesn’t anyone else know about what’s going on here?’ And we just wanted to share more of that.”

Projects they are most proud of Cincy Scoop’s Instagram account posts multiple times a week, and Sarah and Mitko consistently work on multiple projects.

But there are two types of content that make them most proud, one being when they get to spotlight small businesses.

“We posted this Reel about this stuffed croissant that Moxy is doing by Findlay Market, and that got so many views,” Mitko said. “We got to go in there a couple weekends later and talk to some of the folks working there, and they were like, ‘We sold out two weekends in a row.’”

“When you actually see an impact, that makes me very, very happy.”

They also enjoy capturing the Queen City’s hometown pride.

“We’ve been making these montages of Cincinnati,” Sarah said. “That’s where you feel the pride of the city. It wasn’t just people in Cincinnati (engaging with the video). It was people that had lived in Cincinnati and moved away, posting it and saying ‘I miss my hometown. I could cry.’ That’s the feeling we want to capture is this pride and love of Cincinnati.”

Get to know Hofner, ‘Feli from Germany’

Haadiza Ogwude
Cincinnati Enquirer
USA TODAY NETWORK

When exploring Cincinnati, it’s impossible not to see traces of German history and culture.

Felicia Hofner, a native of Munich, Germany, recognized her Deutsch roots immediately.

From the German words inscribed on centuries-old buildings to the name of the Over-the-Rhine neighborhood, Cincinnati’s German heritage can be seen on almost every street corner.

“It’s just fascinating how German immigrants came here and then continued their German culture but in a different way,” Hofner said. “I think it’s very funny still to this day to go through the city and see German words on the walls. I know most people don’t understand what they mean but I do.”

Hofner started a YouTube channel in 2018, and later began focusing on it full-time in 2020, as a way to share her experiences traversing between the two cultures. She never intended to pursue content creation as a full-time job, but she has grown proud of her platform, which she uses to educate thousands of social media users through videos that compare life in Germany to America.

“I always found myself having the same conversations with Americans who met me,” she said, adding that many asked similar questions:

- “What are the biggest cultural differences?”
- “What’s dating life like in Germany compared to the U.S.?”
- “Do Germans really drink their beer warm?”
- “What do Germans think of Americans?”

“I guess I noticed there was an interest there,” she said.

After seven years of posting online, Hofner, aka Feli from Germany, has amassed roughly 682,000 YouTube subscribers, 141,000 Instagram followers, 61,500 followers on TikTok and 71,000 followers on Facebook.

“I always watched YouTube channels of Americans who lived in Germany and I thought it was fascinating to hear how they viewed my culture through their American lens. It felt like maybe I could do the same thing,” she said.

Here is more on Feli from Germany.

A semester abroad brought her to Cincinnati

During her last semester of undergrad, Hofner decided she wanted to complete a study abroad program before “she didn’t have the chance anymore.”

Hofner, 22 at the time, lived a “pretty adult lifestyle,” working three jobs – mostly in media and radio – while finishing her bachelor’s degree at Ludwig Maximilian University of Munich. On the search for a new adventure, she entered an exchange program with the University of Cincinnati’s electronic media division and arrived in the Queen City in 2016.

Hofner later obtained an internship, after her semester abroad ended, so she could come back to the region for six months. She then ultimately landed a spot with UC’s master’s program for German studies.

“I really liked the mentality here in the U.S. that I felt like at that stage of my life was really healthy for me. It was so much positivity here,” she said.

Hofner’s stay in the U.S. became permanent in 2018, when she won the green card lottery, also known as the Diversity Immigrant Visa Program.

‘You can definitely find the German traces’ in Cincinnati

Hofner has become well-acquainted with Cincinnati throughout the last decade. But despite the city having the largest Oktoberfest celebration in the country and being the birthplace of the German-American dish Goetta, it does not feel like a German city, she says.

“I don’t think that’s the case, but you can definitely find the German traces,” she said.

So, if it wasn’t Cincinnati’s German-inspired qualities that kept her coming back for more, what did?

“Definitely the size of everything. Just coming here and having so much space to yourself, and especially in a mid-size city like Cincinnati,” she said.

From department store changing rooms to grocery stores like Jungle Jim’s, Hofner said she was surprised by everything being so “huge” in America. She added that she’s also grown fond of the American mentality, which she describes as “positive.”

“Things like enthusiasm are very much present here in the U.S.,” she added.

Feli Hofner is Cincinnati’s German tour guide

There is no such thing as a typical day for Hofner. She’s often working on multiple projects at once, which consist of researching topics, writing scripts and shooting and editing videos. All that may take roughly a full workweek or, in some cases, even longer to produce.

Creating content is Hofner’s full-time job and through her work, she gets to connect with thousands of people across the world.

“I’m just sitting here in my little room, just me and my camera recording videos and it somehow influences people’s whole lives,” she said.

But Hofner doesn’t just educate others about her culture through her digital platform. Since 2023, Hofner has also hosted a few group trips to Germany, Austria and the Czech Republic.

In December, Hofner will lead her third expedition, taking visitors to several Christmas markets from Berlin to Prague.

“Hearing from people that because of me, they moved to Germany or because of me they started learning German or they decided to reconnect with their German heritage ... that’s always very humbling,” she said.

From testing the Ohio River’s freezing waters to stripping down to his underwear and giving weather updates, Lamenuel Scales grabs your attention with his hilarious Cincinnati-focused news reports.

He calls the social media phenomenon “Hood News.”

But portraying a reporter on social media wasn’t always the plan.

Known to his approximately 200,000 followers on TikTok, Facebook and Instagram combined as Hilarious Scales, the 32-year-old father of two didn’t start taking content creation seriously until about two years ago.

While filming a video about a snow shower, though, he realized he may have struck gold.

Here are more things to know about Scales.

His news journey started with snowy weather

Cincinnati is never short on news stories, but the local weather sparked creative genius in Scales.

While going live on Facebook about two years ago to give his now signature “weather report” during a snow shower, he ended up garnering about 400 to 500 live viewers. Scales’ humor, mixed with local news, seemed to strike a chord.

“That’s when (creating content) started getting more serious,” he said. Scales then took that online reporter persona and ran with it, making the skits part of his regular routine.

When it comes to creating the videos, though, Scales says his process is a little more “chill” than others.

“I wanted it to be natural,” Scales, who focuses on quality over quantity, said. “Anything that’s trending right now, everybody’s talking about it, you got to hop on it almost immediately, but make sure it’s done right. You can never go wrong with the news because

‘If I hit the lottery tomorrow ... I would still reside in Cincinnati’

For Scales, a born-and-bred Cincinnati who went to North College Hill and Amelia high schools, there’s nothing better than repping his hometown.

“Cincinnati is where I’m from, (it’s) what made me the man I am today. My kids live here, all of my family is here, so I love this place,” he said. “If I hit the lottery tomorrow, if I made it big, I would still reside in Cincinnati. This is my spot.”

He’s a die-hard Bengals fan (who also thinks Tee Higgins needs to stay put), and he admires the city’s law enforcement and firefighters, telling their heroic stories whenever he can.

“I have my platform and to this day I use it to stand up for law enforcement and firefighters all the time,” he said. “They get a bad rep, but (they are) good people, they are humans just like us and have families and kids.”

Using social media to give back

Despite being known for his humorous, and sometimes raunchy, skits, Scales is most proud of the projects that directly impact his community.

For the past few Christmases, the social media star has partnered with businesses, such as Wings and Rings, to collect Christmas presents for families in need.

“I just want to grow so I can help more people. That’s the most important goal,” he said. “The laughs are cool, the reactions are cool, but when I can actually help people ... that’s the main goal.”

If you’re on TikTok, you may get Kendra Cunningham’s (@ItsMeKendraC) viral and daily “Rocking Chair Chats” on your feed.

Every single day, the self-proclaimed “yapper” props up her phone and begins chatting (with a cup of coffee in hand). She talks about everything, from national trends to the Cincinnati Bengals, her outfits, date nights and, of course, wedding planning.

Cunningham has a bubbly, infectious and talkative personality that pairs perfectly with her chic style. It’s easy to understand why she has over 57,000 TikTok followers.

She, however, just uses the platform as an outlet to catch up and talk as if she’s on FaceTime with her sister.

“I don’t like to post batched, pre-recorded content because it doesn’t feel as authentic to me. If I’m picking up my phone to FaceTime my sister, I wouldn’t pre-plan what I’m talking about. So, (my content) is pretty authentic,” she said.

Here are more things to know about Cincinnati’s favorite “yapper.”

Her road to content creation was a total accident

There was no planning involved regarding the start of Cunningham’s social media journey.

Posting on social media was an outlet for the 37-year-old to yap, so to speak. Whenever she was waiting to pick up her two boys from school (and her sister didn’t answer the phone), she turned to Instagram as a creative way to talk.

She described her early content as essentially “FaceTiming on Instagram Stories,” until TikTok came out, but she wasn’t immediately on board with the new social media app until her friends encouraged her to post her outfits and current fashion.

“I went to TikTok and I tried it for a little bit with clothes and stuff that I was doing, but I felt so much pressure to keep shopping all the time to have something to use so that other people would have something to buy,” she said.

It wasn’t until her divorce announcement in 2022 that she began “yapping” and sharing aspects of her life with her thousands of TikTok followers.

She’s an open book

Aside from her divorce, Cunningham has also opened up about a range of topics, including her return to the dating scene, being in an interracial relationship for the first time, motherhood, scoring Beyoncé tickets and her current adventure: wedding planning.

“I just sit in my rocking chair every single day on that porch and I just yap about whatever and anything,” she said. “It’s so relatable to people because everyone is going through (a new journey).”

There’s not much she won’t share online, but when it comes to making a career out of content, Cunningham, whose full-time job is in information technology, says social media is mainly just for fun.

“I always have thought about (full-time content creation) ... and it is lucrative and I do make money from it, but it’s not stable enough for me,” she said. “I’ve got two kids, we’ve got a mortgage (and) I just prefer to have more stability in my life.”

This California native loves Cincinnati

Cunningham hasn’t always been in Cincinnati. She lived all over the world before a chance at love (and the Cincinnati Bengals) brought her and her two sons to the Queen City in 2019.

Born in Oakland and raised in Lakewood, the California native joined the military when she was 18. The Air Force then took her to Texas, South Carolina, back to California, Arizona and even Japan.

While living in Japan, she ironically fell in love with the Bengals, or more so the team’s then-wide receiver Chad Johnson.

“I had to wake up early in the morning to watch football, and I used to always try to find the Bengals because I fell in love with Chad Johnson. I love a character,” Cunningham, who has been out of the military since 2013, said.

A relationship ultimately brought Cunningham to Cincinnati, and she has been in the city for the last six years. She quickly embraced the area’s culture (minus the frigid and unpredictable weather), attending Cincinnati’s high-profile festivals, going to Reds games and becoming a season ticket-holder for her beloved Bengals.

Cincinnati is her home.

“I love Cincinnati,” she said. “It’s like a big city, but it’s so small. The people are so kind and the sports fans are unlike anything I’ve ever seen (and) I’m a big sports girl, so I love it.”

One scroll through Mason native Josh Lehenbauer's Instagram page, dubbed @JoshIsBaking, shows a range of crystal-clear food photography rivaling the likes of New York Times Cooking (the page even reposted his work once). Pistachio cake with strawberry buttercream frosting, brown sugar cinnamon hand pies and a sandworm-shaped cake in honor of "Dune: Part Two" are just of the few of the bakes that have attracted more than 15,600 followers to Lehenbauer's page.

The 33-year-old has spent the last six years perfecting his baking and food photography skills, but he's not quite ready to commit to content creation full-time, he says. It started out as a "side hustle" and that's the way it has stayed, with Lehenbauer executing and shooting bakes in the limited hours he has beyond his full-time job.

By day, Lehenbauer works in digital marketing at a local med spa. But it's after work when all the magic happens.

'It took off a little too fast at the beginning' of nowhere for me. It was like, I had never really done it ... even having grown up with it," he said.

With a degree in electronic media from the University of Cincinnati and work experience at iHeartRadio, Lehenbauer has long studied photography and videography. But getting the hang of baking came about more organically.

"I really just started (the Instagram page) to hold myself accountable for learning new baking techniques and things. And I was just having fun with it. And then it took off a little too fast at the beginning, and I wasn't prepared for that," Lehenbauer said of the account, which he started in 2019.

He added that he gets his baking genes from his mom, who made wedding cakes when he was little. But he didn't take to the kitchen himself until 2018, when he was in his late 20s.

During the early years of @JoshIsBaking, Lehenbauer would share a couple of recipes every month. He then posted videos documenting his visits to Greater Cincinnati bakeries. And around 2020, Lehenbauer started a blog, joshisbaking.com, to catalogue all his recipes.

"When I did the blog, I was like, 'Everyone else does a blog. Everyone else does pastry orders.' So I was like, 'I guess that's what I need to do,'" Lehenbauer said. "I was just kind of making it up as I went, because I didn't know what to try."

As he grew more confident in the kitchen, major brands started taking notice.

Partnerships with food brands and more

Over time, Lehenbauer found a stream of income in his social media platform through partnerships with major food brands, such as Betty Crocker.

"A lot of what I do with brands is recipe development, and so they'll send me like, their butter or their frosting or something, and I'm making a recipe with it, or whatever the ingredient that they're trying to push is," Lehenbauer said.

Around three years ago, Lehenbauer began a partnership with Adobe Express, which came about naturally given that he had already used Adobe platforms for editing his food photos and videos. Through that endeavor, he attends Adobe conferences and shares social media graphics he makes using Adobe Express, another element he has added to his regular content.

"I was one of the only bakers in our group of ambassadors, and a lot of other people do hand lettering or graphic design or photography and things like that," he said of his time at an Adobe conference. "So I was surrounded by a lot, and I was like, 'Something tells me I want to do (graphics).' And so I got an iPad and just started drawing."

What's next for @JoshIsBaking?

Looking ahead, Lehenbauer hopes to shift his focus to the design and photo elements of his work rather than the recipe development.

"Now I'm realizing I like to do recipes, but I like to bake and edit and shoot things more," he said.

In tandem with this newfound mission, Lehenbauer hopes to continue finding a healthy balance between his day job and his passion project. In previous years, he would do paid partnerships with brands nearly five days a week, but he has since tamed his own expectations for himself, prioritizing his mental health.

"Now that I'm drawing and doing other things, I'm not so worried about ... trying to feed some algorithm," he said.

Get to know traveling volunteer Jarvis

Cincinnati Enquirer
USA TODAY NETWORK

Loveland native Katelyn Goeperich, née Jarvis, took a break from her finance job in 2017 to travel to Vietnam, Indonesia and Singapore by herself in hopes of returning to Cincinnati feeling refreshed and rejuvenated.

Instead, she felt the opposite: She was bitten by the travel bug.

So, at 24 years old, Jarvis quit her job and set her sights on breaking the Guinness World Record for the fastest and youngest female to travel to every country. She flew from Fort Myers, Florida, to Cancún, Mexico, before hopping on a bus and working her way down Central and South America.

It was all documented on her Instagram, under the name @JourneyWithJarv, which has since amassed approximately 37,000 followers.

Jarvis, however, eventually abandoned the world record chase and focused on Peace Stamps, a nonprofit she founded in 2017, which helped uplift her goal of volunteering in every country she visited.

Eight years later, Jarvis estimates she has traveled to about 163 countries spanning across all seven continents. She has returned to finance, working with her family at Jarvis Global Investments, but still aims to cultivate cultural understanding through her travels.

Here are more things to know about the world traveler.

She has plenty of wacky travel stories

Jarvis has no shortage of wacky travel stories, most of which she documents on her Instagram and through her blog, "Chronicles of an Extreme Traveler."

Among them is the time she visited the African country Eritrea on America's Flag Day. She sat at breakfast one morning when a local came up to her, surprised that an American woman was visiting Eritrea, and asked if she was there for the U.S. Embassy's Flag Day party.

This was the first she heard of a Flag Day party, so she decided to test her luck and see if being American could earn her an invite.

She remembers walking up to the embassy and asking security, "I know this is a very weird situation. I'm an American tourist, and I heard you're having a Flag Day party. Would it be okay if I came to your party?"

They said she could attend, but had to go through enhanced security measures. She, obviously, went and to this day is still good friends with the embassy's head of information technology.

Jarvis also had a time when an immigration officer stole her phone as she tried obtaining her visa to Bolivia. She had to file a theft police report at a prison in La Paz, Bolivia's administrative capital.

"And the head of immigration and the director of tourism for Bolivia were there, and they didn't want this bad interaction to taint tourism to Bolivia. So they chained (the immigration officer) to a desk, but I had to sit at the same desk as him, and it was super awkward," Jarvis said.

"It was a very uncomfortable situation, because you don't want to blame a government official for stealing your cell phone in a foreign country."

Ultimately, she emphasized that so many Bolivian people were eager to help her and the directors of immigration and tourism even took her out to lunch after the debacle.

'The word about Cincinnati is out there'

Jarvis has witnessed excitement for Cincinnati even thousands of miles away from her hometown.

"It's amazing how many people know about the NFL abroad. So when the Bengals went to the Super Bowl, people were excited to meet somebody from Cincinnati," she said, adding that a lot of people also know about Skyline Chili.

"The word about Cincinnati is out there. It's very cool," Jarvis said.

For her next cultural adventure, she's staying in Cincinnati

Jarvis has also discovered that Cincinnati itself boasts a much more culturally diverse spirit than people might expect.

"I've met so many people from around the world (here), like Afghanistan. We met someone from Mauritania (and) lots of Senegalese and Congolese people," Jarvis said about Cincinnati.

For this next chapter, she actually plans to stay put in Cincinnati and, through Peace Stamps, invest in the city's cultural diversity.

"Instead of working with organizations all around the world under Peace Stamps, I'm just gonna work in Cincinnati," she said, adding that she wants to host events where people can learn about the food and culture of other countries.

"I want to just focus on Cincinnati and make Cincinnati a more culturally understanding place."

Get to know local food with Mullet Review

Haadiza Ogwude
Cincinnati Enquirer
USA TODAY NETWORK

Brandon Elliott was sick of eating at fast food restaurants when he went searching through Cincinnati's suburbs to find some of the area's best local cuisine.

He didn't realize others would soon follow.

Elliott, aka Mullet Review, is known around the Queen City for his mom-and-pop restaurant reviews, goofy T-shirts and glorious blond locks. But he didn't set out to become Greater Cincinnati's version of Keith Lee, the uber-popular social media food critic.

He simply visited Lori's American Grille in Goshen in June 2024 and posted a picture of his meal on Facebook. This quickly became a habit for the Milford native, who now spends most days visiting local hot spots, capturing photos of his order and making videos of his experience, which he usually rates a 69 out of 10.

"I was taking pictures and then posting them. Just some of the food places I went to ... then my mom started messaging me telling me, 'Oh, I love it when you do that,'" he said.

Elliott, a mailman by day, has only been posting for nine months. But the restaurant reviewer has already skyrocketed online, amassing over 56,000 followers on Facebook and 30,000 on TikTok.

Now, his videos pop up on For You Pages across the region, with eager fans awaiting his next culinary recommendation.

"I take a lot more pictures with people everywhere I go. That's cool," Elliott said. "I'm not like, you know, Jack Black or something ... but I really enjoy it. It's kind of humbling to have someone want to take a picture with you."

restaurants is the main goal of Elliott's platform. The year 2025 is hard for restaurants, he said. Roughly 11 have shuttered since the start of the year, Enquirer food and dining writer Keith Pandolfi reported.

"I don't feel like I've really done much," he said. "Because the food's great, right? It's just me posting a picture. It's not like I'm going in there and cooking for them like Gordon Ramsay. I'm just the monkey out front, spinning the sign that says, 'Come in here.'"

Elliott's background in the culinary industry is limited. He mainly grew up on drive-thru meals and fondly remembers the days of eating at Frisch's, when the local fast food chain had a smoking section.

By doing food reviews, Elliott has diversified his palette to include dishes he can't even pronounce.

Luckily, he doesn't have to put much effort into finding new places to try. He just drops a comment asking his followers for recommendations and is typically flooded with responses.

"What's cool is there are people who do support these places and just want other people to support them, too. I really don't have to look hard," he said.

Despite his slogan, Mullet Review is on the menu

Burgitto Bistro in Morrow was one of the first restaurants to put Mullet Review "on the menu," back when Elliott only had around 2,000 followers.

"My catchphrase is, 'I'm not on the menu' and then they're like, 'We can change that,'" he said.

The hamburger/crunch-wrap mash-up, called The Mullet, featured a three-quarter pound hamburger, grilled Slim Jims, onion tangles and A1 sauce.

At Lori's American Grille, owner and chef Lori Ellen recently debuted the new Mullet Madness burger, which features two beef patties piled high with tempura battered fried bacon, provolone cheese, lettuce, tomato, dill pickle, red onion, tartar sauce and jalapeño ketchup on a USA-stamped brioche bun.

She also made a burger-of-the-month special named after his social media nickname, which included fried lobster and macaroni and cheese. Unfortunately, this item is no longer available for purchase.

"It was gourmet, especially for somebody like me," he said.

Roscoe's Pizza in Waynesville, known for its selection of 100-plus pizzas, made him a Mullet pie topped with chicken, bacon, Grippo's chips, ranch sauce and a garlic butter sauce. Sharonville's Little Trolley Donuts also created a special treat for Elliott inspired by his favorite cereal: Cinnamon Toast Crunch.

Miranda's Ice Cream Shop in Morrow even went as far as to put a photo of Elliott on its physical menu.

"I'm actually on the menu. In the background there's me riding a unicorn," he said.

What came first, the mullet or the food?

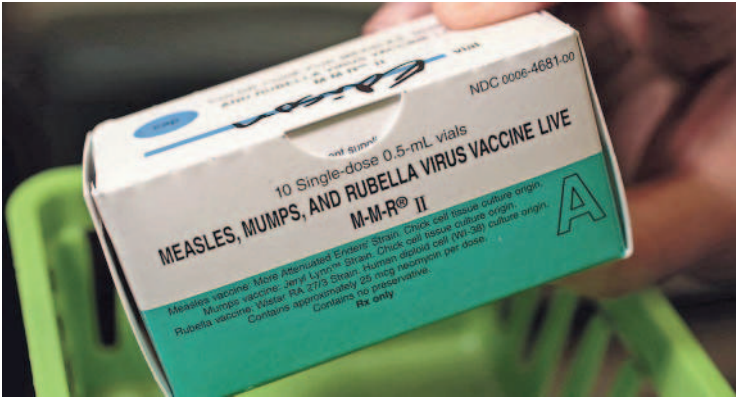

Elliott, also nicknamed the "Hot Blonde," first launched his Mullet Review page in 2024. But his signature hairstyle dates back to a prank from 2020.

He had never had long hair before, but posted on Facebook that he would get a mullet if he got enough likes on his post. The rest is history.

"I did it as a joke thinking it's going to be funny and then I was like, 'Wow, I look pretty good,'" he said. "I didn't grow up like Joe Dirt. It was a dare. Now who's laughing?"

The MMR (measles, mumps and rubella) vaccine is recommended over the stand-alone measles vaccine. RICKY FLORES/THE JOURNAL NEWS

David Robinson
New York State Team
USA TODAY NETWORK

Vaccine hesitancy has contributed to ongoing measles outbreaks in the United States and has prompted health officials in New York and some others states to take steps in better informing people about vaccinations.

Central to the issue has been a push to close gaps in early childhood uptake of the measles, mumps and rubella, or MMR, vaccine, as some parents asked questions about the series of shots recommended for babies.

The stakes were clear as one in five young children in New York, or 20%, had not received the first MMR dose by 2 years of age, leaving them and their communities more vulnerable to measles outbreaks.

Health officials prefer to use combination vaccines for some diseases for several reasons, including reducing the number of shots a child needs to be protected against serious illnesses.

Combining vaccines into fewer shots also may mean that more children will get recommended vaccinations on time, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, or CDC, and that means fewer delays in disease protection.

The Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices, or ACIP, which consists of independent medical and public health experts who do not work for CDC, develop recommendations on the type and number of vaccines that Americans are advised to take. Those recommendations must be adopted by the CDC director before they are used across the nation.

Combination vaccines have been used in the U.S. since the 1940s, with some becoming so common that they are generally known by their initials, such as MMR and DTaP, which stands for diphtheria, tetanus and pertussis.

The MMR vaccine was released in 1971 and has become the standard in the U.S. and many other developed countries, though some other nations still make the standalone measles vaccine available, according to the World Health Organization.

While health officials pushed to increase New York's early childhood MMR vaccination rates, they noted the vaccine's coverage is more robust among school-aged kids, at about 90%, which suggested some parents were delaying shots.

The second MMR dose is recommended for kids between the ages of 4 and 6, with the two-dose regimen providing lifetime protection against measles.

Side effects from combination vaccines are usually mild. They are similar to those of the individual vaccines given separately, CDC said.

Sometimes combination vaccines cause slightly more pain or swelling where the shot was given. But if your child got the shots individually, CDC officials noted, they might have pain or swelling in two or three spots, instead of just one.

For further details about vaccination and measles, visit cdc.gov/measles.

Pinching back flowers, picking a potting mix

Helen Vanella

Special to the News-Leader
USA TODAY NETWORK

Some of my taller flowers last summer grew too tall and flopped over. Can I pinch these back next year to control height without losing flowers?

Most types of annual and perennial flowers can be pinched back to control growth and also to encourage more branching and more blooms. The important thing to remember is to pinch back before any flower buds started to appear, otherwise you will be removing future flowers. Certain flowers such as asters, mums, bee balm and phlox benefit greatly from being pinched back a few times before mid-summer before bud formation is in progress. Mums and aster in particular need pinching about three times beginning in spring, stopping before July 4.

Other flowers, such as campanula, cockscomb, dill, larkspur and most sunflowers, do not benefit from this and should not be pinched back.

These techniques also work for flowering shrubs that bloom most of the season, pinching back more in early and late spring will help create a thicker plant.

How late into the season to pinch these plants can be an experiment. After pinching back plants that bloom in late summer and early fall, pinch back a few others for a few weeks longer, to see what develops. Gardening is a learning process, so experiment to see what works in your garden.

What type of potting soil is best for starting seeds inside?

The best choice for seed starting indoors would be a commercially-produced, soilless mix formulated specifically for starting seeds. These mixtures are made from vermiculite and peat moss.

The mixtures are sterile, lightweight and without weed seeds. Using this type of seed-starting medium can avoid many problems with seed starting, allowing you to avoid difficulties with drainage, moisture retention, soil density and nutrient levels.

A DIY version of a seed-starting medium can be made with equal parts of compost and topsoil, adding a bit of coarse sand. These components need to be sterilized before to avoid soil-borne pathogens. Old potting soil can also be used, but should be sterilized first.

Avoid any type of soil containing fertilizer, as new seedlings do not require this.

How do I care for my potted azalea while I have it inside?

Flowering azaleas tolerate normal room temperature well, however will last longer if kept at slightly cooler temperatures, around 60-65 degrees F. The plant needs to be in a well-lighted location, however avoid direct sun. Sun directly on the flowers will cause them to fade and they won't last as long. After blooms stop, the plant can be moved to a sunny window.

The soil should never be allowed to dry out completely. Watering should be done from the bottom, submerging the pot in a bucket of deep water, removing when bubbles stop rising, then allow the pot to drain before putting back in its saucer.

The plant should be fertilized every two weeks with a complete, soluble liquid fertilizer. Deadheading spent flowers will help to disease problems and will also give the plant a more tidy appearance.

GARDENING

Composting, broken down into five easy steps

Miranda McGrath

Wooster Daily Record
USA TODAY NETWORK

Spring is here, and with it comes lawn care and thoughts of planting a garden. One of the ways to reduce household waste and help to create a nutrient-rich soil for those gardens, lawns and landscaping is to compost.

By following a few key steps, anyone can turn organic scraps into a valuable resource.

Here is a guide to composting based off of Compost101 by Steve Tharp Jr., assistant executive director at Stark-Tuscarawas-Wayne Recycling District in Wilkshire Hills, Ohio.

1. How to begin composting and how to avoid the smell

To start composting, choose a location for a pile or use a bin with drainage holes.

Start with a base layer of coarse materials, such as straw or small branches, to aid airflow and drainage. From there, build the pile using a mix of green and brown materials.

- Greens: These nitrogen-rich materials include fruit and vegetable scraps, coffee grounds, grass clippings and plant trimmings.

- Browns: These carbon-rich materials include dried leaves, cardboard, sawdust and wood chips.

Maintain a ratio of one part greens to three parts browns. The balance ensures proper decomposition and prevents unpleasant odors.

2. The right mix of moisture and oxygen

A compost pile should remain moist but not saturated. The ideal moisture level is comparable to a wrung-out sponge.

Rainwater may naturally hydrate outdoor piles, but in dry conditions, adding water periodically may be necessary.

Aeration also is crucial. Turning the pile at least once a week allows oxygen to reach microorganisms that break down organic matter.

You know compost is ready to use when it's dark like dirt or topsoil, has a crumbly texture, and none of the organic materials you used can be recognized. PROVIDED BY ERIC LARSON

Turn the pile with a pitchfork, compost tumbler or by rolling a sealed bin on the ground.

3. Maintaining compost

Regular maintenance is simple. Continue adding kitchen scraps and yard waste, always topping greens with three times as many browns to maintain the balance.

Stirring the compost weekly helps accelerate decomposition and reduces odor.

Adding a small amount of garden soil or aged compost early in the process introduces beneficial microorganisms, speeding up decomposition. Shredding or cutting materials into small pieces can help break them down faster.

4. Fixing common issues: dry, wet, slow decomposition

- Dry compost: Add water or green materials to restore moisture.

- Wet or smelly compost: Mix in additional browns such as cardboard or straw and improve aeration by stirring more frequently.

- Slow decomposition: Increase the amount of greens or add an activator, such as garden soil or aged compost, to introduce more microorganisms.

- Rodent or insect problems: Avoid adding meat, dairy or oily foods, and always cover food scraps with a layer of browns.

5. Using finished compost

According to the EPA, compost "in a well-maintained pile will be finished and ready for use in about three to five months."

Finished compost will be dark brown, crumbly and have an earthy scent. It can be used to enrich garden soil, fertilize potted plants, improve lawn health and even as mulch.

For gardens, mix one part compost with two parts soil for planting. For lawns, spread compost lightly over the grass and rake it in to improve soil health.

Composting not only reduces waste but also promotes sustainable gardening practices.

Get to know drone videographer Zak Kauth

David Wysong
Cincinnati Enquirer
USA TODAY NETWORK

Drone videographer Zak Kauth wasn't even interested in drones until he was in college in 2015 at the University of Cincinnati. He never thought it would be something he would pursue professionally, and he didn't even pick up a camera until years later.

"I thought drones were just a super cool idea from a technology standpoint," Kauth, who went to school for mechanical engineering, said. "I thought it was cool that you could fly some little device up in the sky and take photos and videos with that. So, when I first got into it, it was just for fun."

As he gained more experience, Kauth took drone videography seriously.

Now, he's built a strong community on Instagram, with more than 36,000 followers watching his stunning videos that highlight Cincinnati from a bird's-eye view.

Here are more things to know about Kauth, one of the top Cincinnati-based content creators to follow in 2025.

A project he is most proud of Kauth, whose full-time job is with Turner Construction Co. as a project engineer, has gained respect throughout the city, so much so he's freelanced for some of Cincinnati's biggest events.

One of the projects he's most proud of is his work with Blink.

"I just poured all my effort, everything I've learned up to date into that," he said. "I posted a few compilation videos covering the whole weekend, and I really had full creative control in these videos that I made for them. My favorite thing to do is, someone just tells me to go do my thing when I'm covering an event."

The creative freedom mixed with the way the community embraced Blink led to a rewarding experience for Kauth.

"Being such a cool event that the whole city's already behind – all these artists coming in from across the world showing off what they can do," he said. "If I wanted to show someone what I can do, it might be the videos from Blink 2024."

What's harder, flying the drone and taking the video or editing the video?

Anyone who just scrolls through Kauth's feed sees his creativity on full display. In addition to his videos that take viewers on trips atop the Queen City, he also shares projects that create a warped reality through various photo and video animations.

So when it comes to the most difficult part of his creative process, the answer is easy: it's the editing.

"Most people, I tell them, 'I can hand you a controller and you can figure out how to fly the drone,'" he said. "Taking the footage off the SD card, and pulling it into whatever software and learning all the editing steps – that's definitely the hardest part."

"The difference between someone who's just starting out on a drone versus a professional, it's all the time they've spent in those softwares, getting better and better at the editing."

Why he enjoys putting a spotlight on Cincinnati

Kauth didn't grow up in Cincinnati. Originally from Massillon, Ohio, he's more familiar with small town vibes. But he's now been in the Queen City for a decade and has fully embraced all it has to offer.

It shows in his work, as he often captures the excitement of the area during specific times of the year.

Nicola Pietoso is seen at his Over-the-Rhine restaurant Nicola’s in 2010. GARY LANDERS/ENQUIRER FILE

Owner: Nicola’s moving to historic restaurant space

Keith Pandolfi Cincinnati Enquirer | USA TODAY NETWORK

Nicola’s, the beloved Italian restaurant opened by Nicola Pietoso almost 30 years ago on the border of Over-the-Rhine and Pendleton, will relocate to the old Pigall’s space at 127 W. Fourth St., Downtown, in 2026. ● Owner Cristian Pietoso, who took over the restaurant from his father several years ago, confirmed the move to The Enquirer. “This is an evolution,” he told me. “We wanted to find a space that is appropriate for a restaurant like Nicola’s, and it was not an easy task. We knew that it had to be in the city; we didn’t want to move to the suburbs.”

The Fourth Street space, which has been empty for about 15 years, was originally a residence owned by the Sinton and Taft families. In 1963, it opened as Pigall’s, a French restaurant that eventually earned a Mobil five-star rating. It was one of three local Mobil five-star restaurants at the time, the others being The Maisonette and The Gourmet Room. It closed in 1990. In 2004, late chef Jean-Robert de Cavel reopened the restaurant as Jean-Robert at Pigall’s, which closed in 2009.

Cristian Pietoso, who also owns Forno and Via Vite, intends to honor the Pigall’s legacy at the relocated restaurant. He also plans to honor his father, who, against all odds, kept Nicola’s open through several trials and pipe dream. But despite the proliferation of newer, perhaps trendier spots in the area, it remains as popular and relevant to the Cincinnati dining scene as ever.

“The survival of this restaurant is a tribute to my dad,” Pietoso told me. “Thirty years ago, Over-the-Rhine was not a cool space to open a restaurant, especially a fine dining restaurant. I don’t know how he made it through the riots or the financial crisis or Sept. 11. But somehow this place survived.

“This is a big deal for us,” he continued. “In many ways, I felt like it was meant to be.”

M. Hopple & Co. stationery store to close after 44 years

Randy Tucker Cincinnati Enquirer USA TODAY NETWORK

Rising costs and competition from online retailers spelled the end for one of Cincinnati’s small businesses, M. Hopple & Co. card and stationery store, which will close after 44 years.

Owner Morgan Busam refused to attribute her store’s demise to tariffs, although she acknowledged telling the Cincinnati Business Courier last week that tariffs were expected to drive her costs up significantly on items imported from other countries.

“We’ve been getting a lot of hate,” she said, noting supporters of tariffs recently imposed by President Donald Trump have condemned the business journal’s report as “bulls----” in online comments. “I don’t want to talk about tariffs anymore.”

Paper products targeted for tariffs

Trump last month signed executive orders placing 25% tariffs on goods from Canada and Mexico, including paper products, in what he described as an effort to stem the flow of fentanyl and illegal immigration into the United States.

Canada quickly responded by instituting a 25% tax on $155 billion worth of U.S. imports, including pulp and paper, which is expected to lead to higher costs for businesses and consumers.

Busam said a combination of factors contributed to the store’s struggles and her ultimate decision to close, including rising rent for the store space she leases at 7920 Hosbrook Road in Madeira in the Kenwood Galleria – about a half-mile east of Kenwood Towne Centre.

False accusations with case involving deportations

Strictly Legal Jack Greiner
Guest columnist

There has been much discussion about a lawsuit pending in Washington, D.C., wherein District Court Judge James Boasberg is presiding over a case filed by the American Civil Liberties Union on behalf of five Venezuelans swept up in a deportation action initiated by the Trump administration.

Much of that discussion is ill informed and false. Let’s see if we can set the matter straight.

The Trump administration has invoked the Alien Enemies Act to justify the deportations. This law, passed in 1789, gives the president powers with respect to the regulation, detention and deportation of enemy aliens. Before now, it has been invoked three times – during the War of 1812, World War I and World War II.

The ACLU’s complaint argues that the Trump administration did not properly invoke the statute and further contends that its use here violates the Fifth Amendment’s guarantee of due process. The case was randomly assigned to Boasberg.

The plaintiffs asked Boasberg to issue a temporary restraining order to block their transport out of the country. It is common for parties to ask for a temporary restraining order to maintain the “status quo” while the court considers the merits of the case. A restraining order is appropriate where a party may suffer “irreparable injury” if the challenged action proceeds. In this case, the five Venezuelans certainly face irreparable injury, given that they are going to be permanently deported without court intervention.

This is exactly how our judicial system is supposed to operate. Outside of the invocation of the Alien Enemies Act, there isn’t anything particularly unusual here. But that’s not how the Trump administration sees it.

In a Truth Social post, President Donald Trump called Boasberg a “radical left lunatic” and said he should be impeached. Stephen Miller, President Trump’s Deputy Chief of Staff, had this to say: “You cannot have a democracy where single, individual district court judges can assume the full total powers of the Commander in Chief.” He added, “A single district court judge cannot set policy for the entire nation.”

Furthering his point, Miller remarked, “Think about it from the standpoint of the Marxist left. What they’ll do is they’ll find a radical communist, somebody who hates our civilization and hates our way of life and they’ll install them in some little-known district court somewhere in the country that most people would never even think about ... then Donald Trump gets into power, now that judge assumes the full power of the presidency.”

Let’s take these statements one by one. We don’t need to spend much time on Trump’s impeachment comment – Chief Justice John Roberts responded to that comment, noting, “[f]or more than two centuries, it has been established that impeachment is not an appropriate response to disagreement concerning a judicial decision. The normal appellate review process exists for that purpose.”

Miller’s comments completely misconstrue what Boasberg is doing. He is not “assuming the powers of the commander in chief.” He is not “setting policy.” He is simply adjudicating a case and applying the law to the facts as presented.

There are conditions to invoking the Alien Enemies Act. The ACLU contends those conditions weren’t met here. The Constitution takes precedence over a statute. The ACLU contends that is the case here. The appropriate way to resolve these questions is to file a lawsuit in a federal district court.

I heard Miller in an interview state that the Alien Enemies Act doesn’t provide for “judicial review.” That is completely disingenuous. The Supreme Court first recognized the concept of judicial review Marbury v. Madison, a case decided in 1803, 14 years after the passage of the Alien Enemies Act.

Miller’s rant about Boasberg as a “radical communist” who “hates our civilization” is over the top, even by Miller’s standards. And it’s completely out of bounds. Just because you disagree with someone doesn’t give you license to make stuff up about them.

I am not a fan of Miller, but that doesn’t mean I can call him a cannibal. I mean, he may be. He’s not provided any evidence to refute it, but I can’t just say it. It doesn’t work that way.

Folks a little older than me lived through the McCarthy era, when hyperbole and false accusations were all the rage. Let’s not relive history in 2025. We are better than that.

Long-term care insurance could be smart purchase

Guest columnists

Every week, Allworth Financial's Amy Wagner and Steve Hruby, CFP®, answer your questions. If you, a friend, or someone in your family has a money issue or problem, feel free to send those questions to yourmoney@enquirer.com.

Diane in Greenhills: I’m 59. Do I need to buy long-term care insurance?

Answer: As you get close to hitting 60, it’s natural to start thinking about what comes next. One of those big questions, at least from a financial standpoint, is whether or not you should buy long-term care insurance. It’s a tricky and confusing topic, but let’s break it down in a simple way.

Long-term care insurance is a policy that helps cover the cost of care if you can no longer manage everyday activities on your own – things like bathing, dressing or even just getting around the house. This care can be in your home or in a nursing facility, and unfortunately, it’s something Medicare does not fully cover (which many people don’t realize).

So, getting to your question: Do you need it? It depends on your personal situation.

If you have a strong family history of health problems or chronic conditions, you might want to think about it more seriously. Because while many of us think we’ll never need it, the reality is that about 70% of people over age 65 will need some form of long-term care during their lifetime, according to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

And as a woman, here’s something else to consider: Women tend to live longer than men, so they’re more likely to need care at some point – and for a longer amount of time.

The next thing to consider is your overall financial picture. The longer you wait to buy a policy, the more expensive it becomes since premiums rise as you age. On average, women pay about 20-40% more than men for the same coverage, according to industry experts like AARP and the American Association for Long-Term Care Insurance (AALTCI).

However, if you’re fortunate enough to have significant savings or a solid pension, you might decide to self-insure and take the risk of paying out-of-pocket if care is needed. But for most people, insurance can provide peace of mind that they won’t drain their savings if the unexpected happens.

Here’s the Allworth Advice: One of the best recommendations we have is to get a financial plan from a fiduciary financial advisor. This will help provide a more comprehensive snapshot of the current state of your finances, which can then help inform this decision. Because, ultimately, it all comes down to your health history, finances and how much risk you’re comfortable with taking.

Roy from Warren County: I hate budgeting. Any suggestions for me?

Answer: We’ll admit it: budgeting isn’t exactly one of the most exhilarating activities, especially if you aren’t a “numbers person.” But the concept itself is still important. You need to know how much you have coming in, how much you have going out and how much you’re saving.

One alternative we really like is called “the anti-budget.” With this method, as long as you hit your savings goal at the beginning of the month, that’s all that matters. So, let’s say you save the Allworth-recommended 20% of your pay each month; you can then spend $100 at the grocery store or $200. The nitty-gritty details are meaningless because you’ve already hit your savings goal. Just make sure you can cover all your bills with the money that’s left and you’re not carrying a balance on your credit card(s).

The Allworth Advice is if you’re looking for a little more simplicity and freedom, try the anti-budget. But you must always hit your monthly savings goal to make it work. Good luck!

“Rent has been a major factor. We can’t continue to stay in this space any longer,” said Busam, who bought the business from its founder, Mary Hopple, 11 years ago.

Busam opened a second retail location in 2016 at 511 Walnut St. near Fountain Square, but she shuttered that location two years later.

“The real reason we’re closing is it’s tough to be a small business,” Busam said, noting the business was founded in 1981 in the atrium of The Westin hotel Downtown and has been in its current location for the past 13 years.

“Everything is more expensive now. Rent, employee costs are all higher. Traffic has declined, and, obviously, online (retail) has taken away,” said Busam, who has four full-time employees and a few part-time staff.

The business will maintain regular store hours until it closes April 11, opening Monday through Friday from 10 a.m.-5 p.m., and Saturday from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., according to Busam, who said she will focus on her career as a real estate agent with Sibcy Cline after the store closes.

Many eateries split on imposing egg surcharges

Gabe Hauari
USA TODAY

Some restaurant chains in recent weeks have announced surcharges on menu items featuring eggs amid an egg shortage caused by the bird flu, while other chains have decided to take on the burden of high egg costs themselves.

Popular breakfast chain Waffle House in early February implemented a temporary 50 cent-per-egg surcharge at its roughly 2,100 locations across the U.S. In a statement obtained by USA TODAY in February, the chain cited the “continuing egg shortage caused by HPAI (Bird Flu)” that has caused a “dramatic increase in egg prices.”

In late February, Denny’s also announced it was implementing a temporary surcharge to every meal that includes eggs. The company declined to release specific details on which of its more than 1,300 locations would be affected, saying the pricing decision is “market-by-market, and restaurant-by-restaurant” due to the regional impacts of the egg shortage.

“This situation is continuing to evolve, and we are working closely with our procurement team and our franchisees to make decisions that are right for the business while maintaining value for our guests,” Denny’s said in a statement at the time.

McDonald’s and Cracker Barrel, on the other hand, said they would not implement surcharges, with Cracker Barrel even offering customers “double pegs” rewards on all egg dishes for a few days following the announcement. McDonald’s offered Egg McMuffins for $1 in late February after their announcement.

“At Cracker Barrel, country hospitality is as important to us as a hearty breakfast – and that means not charging extra for eggs,” the restaurant and gift store chain said in a statement in early February.

USA TODAY reached out to multiple chains to ask whether they had plans to implement an egg surcharge.

Among the companies that responded to USA TODAY’s request for comment were Bojangles, First Watch, Wendy’s, Starbucks and CKE Restaurants Holdings, which owns and operates both Hardee’s and Carl’s Jr. All of them said they had no plans to implement egg surcharges.

Wendy’s told USA TODAY it has “no plans to raise prices on eggs” and CKE also said it had no plans to implement a surcharge at Hardee’s or Carl’s Jr.

“We have not taken any pricing action directly related to eggs,” First Watch said in an emailed statement to USA TODAY. “We continue to monitor the environment while keeping our customer top-of-mind.”

Bojangles also said it “does not have any plans for an egg surcharge at this time.”

Starbucks told USA TODAY it will not be increasing menu prices this fiscal year as part of its “effort to ensure that every Starbucks visit is worth it for our customers.”

Other companies, including Subway, Taco Bell, IHOP, Burger King and Chick-fil-A, either did not respond to USA TODAY’s request for comment or declined to comment.

Protect your sensitive data from hackers

Best method: Don't give up your info in first place

Daniel de Visé
USA TODAY

Data breaches have delivered so many passwords, birth dates and Social Security numbers to the dark web, the whole idea of protecting your identity might feel like a lost cause. But experts say there's still good reason to fight for your data privacy. And here's one way to start: Resist giving it up in the first place.

That big-box retailer does not really need your birth date to enroll you in its loyalty program. That doctor can treat you without knowing your Social Security number. Your favorite pizza place might want to store your credit card number, but you could just type it in.

"We're often asked for our data in situations where it's not needed," said Kimberly Palmer, personal finance expert at NerdWallet.

The problem with repeatedly sharing your data, experts say, is that each time you do, you potentially heighten the risk of falling prey to identity thieves.

In August 2024, a little-known Florida company called National Public Data acknowledged the theft of 2.9 billion records – including names, addresses and Social Security numbers – dating back decades.

Back in 2013, hackers compromised 3 billion Yahoo accounts, stealing names, email addresses, telephone numbers, dates of birth and other data.

Hackers have breached some of the most secure networks in America. In 2017, thieves swiped the data of nearly 150 million Americans from Equifax, the credit reporting agency. More recently, Elon Musk's Department of Government Efficiency has gained access to innumerable government records, raising fresh fears of a breach.

"One thing that is underscored repeatedly is that you just can't control where your data goes," said Derek Kravitz, deputy editor for special projects at Consumer Reports. "Every expert will say it's unrealistic to think you can control all of the PII (personally identifiable information) that's out there."

Prioritize your data

A credit card number can be changed. A birth date cannot.

In safeguarding your data, prioritize data that cannot be easily replaced, said Steve Grobman, chief technology officer at McAfee.

"If you lose your credit card, you can cancel your credit card," he said. By contrast, "once your Social Security number is in the wrong hands, there's not an easy way to take it back," he said.

"Not all valuable data should be treated equally," Grobman said. With each data point, ask this question: "If it does fall into the wrong hands, is it something that you can mitigate completely?"

Consumers should be most careful with immutable data, like Social Security numbers, birth dates and driver's license numbers, which are difficult or impossible to change.

Think about who wants your data

A government agency or lender might have a legitimate reason to ask for a Social Security number or date of birth, and you may have a compelling reason to supply it: Maybe you need a new passport, or a mortgage.

But you may also be asked for a date of birth or driver's license number at the return counter at the mall, or in an application for a discount program.

Think hard, Grobman said, "before you give your Social Security number to Bob's Pizza to join their pizza club."

Give data on need-to-know basis

We tend to fill out forms "on autopilot," Palmer said, handing over personal data on request to just about anyone.

One recent morning, Palmer was filling out a form for a medical practice. The form asked for a Social Security number. She left it blank.

"I've always left it blank, and I've never had any problems," she said. "I would definitely encourage people to question whenever they're asked for data that doesn't seem necessary."

Beware of unsolicited calls, texts

In the world of data scams, unsolicited phone calls, emails and text messages are red flags, experts say.

If someone contacts you for personal data, it's probably never wise to give it up. If you think the request may be genuine and it comes from a familiar source, then go to the bookmarked website and initiate contact yourself, or call the number on your statement.

"Never engage with somebody who makes the contact to you," Grobman said. "Don't click on the links in the email."

If the communication sounds urgent, all the more reason to assume it's a scam.

"When you're in these situations, step one is just to stop," Grobman said. "There's almost nothing in this world where acting instantly is required."

In the spirit of data privacy, here are two more boilerplate rules to follow if you want to stay safe.

Use multifactor authentication

You probably do this already: When you sign in to your bank, your 401(k) account or any other site that's reasonably secure, you endure the mild tedium of entering a PIN that's been sent to your cell phone.

Multifactor authentication "can keep identity thieves from accessing your accounts if they only have your username and password," said Margaret Poe, head of consumer credit education at TransUnion.

Scam victims often report that they neglected to enable two-step authentication on their plundered accounts, Kravitz said.

Get a password manager

Simple, predictable passwords are easily hacked. Overused passwords tend to wind up on the dark web.

"It's best practice to update your passwords regularly, and use complex, unique passwords or passphrases for all of your accounts," Poe said.

That gets easier if you use a password manager, which can generate endless numbers of unique, complex passwords and keep track of them for you.

Google, Apple and Microsoft all offer password managers, along with such well-regarded services as Bitwarden and 1Password.

Many factors contribute to home-building costs

USA TODAY NETWORK – OHIO

CANTON, Ohio – If you’re in the market for a new home, you might wonder about the factors contributing to the home’s total cost.

The National Association of Home Builders recently published a Cost of Construction Survey, which details the various costs of building a typical new single-family home. Many of the results show that the percentage contribution of each component has remained relatively consistent in recent years.

According to the 2024 survey of home builders, the biggest single component of a new home’s total sales price is construction costs, which accounts for about 64.4%. For example, the sales price of a $665,298 house would likely factor in construction costs of approximately $428,215.

Survey respondents broke down construction costs into eight major construction stages:

- Interior finishes (cabinets, dry-wall, flooring): 24.1%
- Major system rough-ins (electrical, HVAC, plumbing): 19.2%
- Framing: 16.6%
- Exterior finishes (roofing, windows): 13.4%
- Foundations: 10.5%
- Site work (architecture, building/permit/impact fees): 7.6%
- Final steps (driveway, landscaping): 6.5%
- Other costs: 2.1%

- Exterior finishes (roofing, windows): 13.4%
- Foundations: 10.5%
- Site work (architecture, building/permit/impact fees): 7.6%
- Final steps (driveway, landscaping): 6.5%
- Other costs: 2.1%

The share of construction costs to the total price of a new home is the highest since NAHB first produced the survey in 1998. Some of the factors that contribute to the construction costs are the ongoing skilled labor shortages and building material price increases.

The average single-family home size in the 2024 survey was 2,647 square feet of finished floor space, an increase of 86 square feet from 2022. From 2015 to 2022, the average square footage of a home trended downward. Constructing homes with smaller square footage in recent years is a response by builders to meet the current housing affordability challenges buyers face.

Though building practices and the cost of labor, land and materials can vary widely across the country, these national averages provide an overall snapshot for the building industry.

Data shows mortgage rates hovering near 3-month low

Andrea Riquier
USA TODAY

Rates for home loans hover near a three-month low, providing some relief for Americans in the market to buy or refinance a mortgage.

In the week ending March 13, 30-year fixed-rate mortgages averaged 6.65%, Freddie Mac announced March 20. That’s up fractionally from 6.63% last week, but still the lowest since mid-December. Those figures don’t include fees or points, and rates in some parts of the country may be higher or lower than the national average.

Applications for mortgages have spiked higher in March, according to the Mortgage Bankers Association. But as rates and home prices remain elevated, many Americans believe homeownership is increasingly out of reach.

Northwestern Mutual’s 2025 Planning & Progress Study found that among Americans who are not currently homeowners, 53% say that owning a home will never be financially affordable – now or in the future. The biggest hurdle, according to respondents of all ages, is the down payment.

But down payment assistance programs have been helping Americans get over that hurdle for many years, and there are now more such programs available than ever before, according to Atlanta-based Down Payment Resource, which tracks them.

All 3,143 U.S. counties have at least one such program, while over 2,000 counties have 10 or more programs, a Down Payment Resource spokesperson told USA TODAY. The average benefit is $18,000, and a state-by-state program guide can be found here.

Andrea Munoz, 34, used down payment assistance from the city of San Antonio when she bought her first home last winter. She is a clinical lab assistant for a university health system and a single mom of five children ranging in age from 7 to 17.

Munoz was diagnosed with lupus during one of her pregnancies. It took several years, multiple attempts to work with housing counseling groups, and lots of heartache before Munoz walked in the door at the nonprofit Neighborhood Housing Services.

“I felt like I was never going to be able to own a home. It was just like a fading dream,” Munoz told USA TODAY. But NHS staff connected her with a real estate agent, and she applied for $12,000 of down payment assistance through a city program called Homeownership Incentive Programs.

But when a city employee called to tell her she’d been chosen for one of the HIP awards, the amount was $30,000. With that money, Munoz was able not only to put more money down, but also to buy down her rate a bit and have more left over for closing costs.

Munoz has simple advice for other aspiring buyers: “Don’t give up.”

Republicans divided on spending cuts

David Morgan and Bo Erickson
REUTERS

WASHINGTON – Congressional Republicans are struggling over how to pay for President Donald Trump’s multitrillion-dollar tax-cut and immigration-reform agenda, with the fate of the Medicaid and the nation’s debt ceiling hanging in the balance.

The debate has Trump’s party torn between its traditional aversion to adding to the nation’s $36.6 trillion debt and some members’ desire to protect Medicaid benefits to working-class voters who have become an important part of their base, as well as tax breaks for residents of higher-tax, typically Democratic states that helped Republicans win their current narrow House of Representatives majority.

The nonpartisan Committee for a Responsible Federal Budget estimates that extending Trump’s signature 2017 tax cuts and some of his other proposals – like cutting taxes on tips and overtime – could add $11 trillion to the debt over the next decade. Additional funds to tighten border security, step up deportation efforts and boost military spending would add to the tab.

Members of the House Freedom Caucus are aiming for $2 trillion in spending cuts over a decade, with $880 billion of that sum expected to come from Medicaid and green energy tax credits.

Moderate Republicans are pushing to limit to $250 billion the cuts to Medicaid, which covered about 35 million people in states Trump won in last year’s presidential election, and retain some green tax credits for farmers.

“They seem really far apart within our conference,” said Sen. Cynthia Lummis, R-Wyoming, who wants to see trillions of dollars in spending cuts to move toward a balanced budget. “It provides people like me who want deeper cuts with a little more leverage,” she said.

Top Senate Republican John Thune, of South Dakota, and his House counterpart, Speaker Mike Johnson, R-Louisiana, said they also aim to use the sweeping tax-cut bill to raise the nation’s debt ceiling, which must be done by sometime this summer to avert a devastating default.

Democrats, angered by the risk to Medicaid and more broadly by Trump’s campaign to radically reshape the federal government, have signaled that they will not back the plan.

“They’re raising the debt to accomplish dangerous things that will hurt the safety, security, health and welfare of the American people,” House Minority Leader Hakeem Jeffries, D-New York, told Reuters. “They’re the ones who have decided that rather than engage in responsible negotiations, they want to go it alone.”

Republicans tested

Republicans will also face opposition from within. Kentucky Sen. Rand Paul said he will not support a Trump agenda bill that raises the debt ceiling.

“I’m for making the tax cuts permanent, and I’m open to discussion as to what the tax cuts are,” Paul told Reuters. “I’m just not open to adding 4 or 5 trillion to the debt limit.”

Repeated congressional brinkmanship over the debt has led two of the three largest global rating agencies to cut the federal government’s once top-tier credit rating, and investors have warned the U.S. Treasury bond market’s safe-haven status could also be at risk.

Some lawmakers from Republican states that expanded Medicaid under the Affordable Care Act have vowed to hold the line against benefit reductions, opting instead to support work requirements for able-bodied beneficiaries.

Sen. Josh Hawley, R-Missouri, said he would support work requirements, but noted that many of his constituents rely on Medicaid and a related health care program for children in low-income families: “21% of Missourians get Medicaid or CHIP. So that’s a lot of people – working people.”

Rep. Don Bacon, R-Nebraska, said about 20 House Republicans support a more modest $250 billion savings from Medicaid that would include work requirements and the elimination of waste, fraud and abuse. The group would not support hundreds of billions in cuts beyond that.

SALT strategy

Republicans are also debating whether to keep the current $10,000 deduction limit for state and local taxes, which is important to high-taxed states like New York, California and New Jersey. Republicans hold 19 House seats in those largely Democratic states, without which they would not have the majority.

“The fact that so many members are citing SALT as a priority is hard to ignore,” said Rep. Nicole Malliotakis, R-New York, referring to the acronym for state and local taxes.

Raising the current cap on SALT deduction will provide extra pressure for Republicans to cut spending. In the end, however, lawmakers noted that the House last month passed a measure that took the first step toward extending the tax cuts with only one Republican “no” vote, which they said reflected Trump’s hold over the party.

“The greatest whip is actually in the White House and a lot of our members will listen to what he says,” said Rep. Mike Kelly, R-Pennsylvania.

WH orders redirection of spy satellites

Asks Defense Dept. groups to turn focus to southern border

Marisa Taylor and Jeffrey Dastin
REUTERS

WASHINGTON – The Trump administration has directed two intelligence agencies to train their satellite surveillance capabilities on the U.S.-Mexico border region as part of a sweeping crackdown on illegal immigration and drug cartels.

The National Geospatial-Intelligence Agency and the National Reconnaissance Office, which are part of the Department of Defense, oversee spy satellites and analyze imagery for the Pentagon and other intelligence organizations.

Their engagement, coupled with troop deployments, shows increasing militarization of the southern border, where President Donald Trump has declared a national emergency. Reuters could not determine whether the effort, which has not been previously reported, would gather imagery of U.S. territory.

Asked by Reuters about their roles in border surveillance, the NGA said it had created a task force to coordinate its “support to the U.S. border mission,” while the NRO said it was partnering with the intelligence community and Pentagon “to secure U.S. borders.”

Their participation is in response to sweeping executive actions by Trump aimed at stopping unauthorized border trafficking and crossings, as well as deporting those in the United States illegally – estimated to be up to 14 million people.

The White House and Defense Department did not respond to a request for comment. Trump made immigration enforcement a central part of his campaign that catapulted him to a second term in office. While the government has deployed artificial intelligence and drone surveillance at the border for years, the latest initiative seeks to expand the use of military capabilities generally built for conflict overseas.

The government could use AI to identify objects or persons of interest by sifting through satellite images and other data feeds, much like the Defense Department can do on the battlefield, said two sources familiar with the initiative.

Though Reuters could not determine the exact scope of this effort, the new focus on the border could force the administration to grapple with safeguards against collecting intelligence on Americans, three experts said. While laws generally restrict U.S. spy agencies from surveilling citizens and other legal residents, they allow immigration authorities to conduct physical searches “within a reasonable distance from any external boundary of the United States.” Regulations have defined this as 100 air miles from the border – an area including cities such as San Diego and El Paso, Texas.

“If they follow the law, these agencies should only collect on the other side of the border in foreign territory,” said Paul Rosenzweig, a lawyer who specializes in national security and privacy law. “But how they implement that, and if they do, are legitimate oversight questions.”

A spokesperson for the office of the director of national intelligence, the government’s lead unit for integrating spy efforts, told Reuters that all intelligence activities are “legal and authorized” and conducted “in a manner that protects the civil liberties and privacy of U.S. persons.”

The NGA and NRO declined to detail what they are collecting and whether such surveillance could include U.S. territory, citing the need to protect operational details. The NGA works on a wide array of efforts including mapping features of the earth and informing commanders of the exact location of U.S. forces and adversaries.

Reuters could not ascertain whether any other U.S. intelligence agencies would be involved in the effort. The CIA has no role in domestic immigration enforcement. “Once foreign criminals are inside the United States, they are not within the purview of the CIA,” a third source said.

The Trump administration has elevated border security in its ranking of national intelligence priorities, allowing the government to direct more resources to it, one of the sources said.

In a separate annual threat assessment released March 25, the U.S. intelligence community ranked transnational criminals such as drug-trafficking organizations among top national security threats – listed above those posed by North Korea, Iran and other foreign adversaries.

In addition, the National Security Council, an interagency group that advises the president on a range of defense and foreign policy matters, has received daily briefings on immigration detentions numbers, including the arrest of unaccompanied children, according to internal government documents reviewed by Reuters.

Multiple defense contractors – new and legacy ones alike – are in talks with various government agencies to aid the border-security work, building on existing deals they have, said the two sources aware of the initiative.

The contractors’ work would require navigating legal boundaries, including creating security policies to prevent unlawful checks on Americans, the sources said.

Industry software also could connect sensor towers to satellite and drone video feeds showing at-risk areas, and then AI could flag leads to authorities, these sources said.

A “digital wall” to augment the border’s physical one would be the goal, said one of the sources. For instance, data analytics provider Palantir powers the so-called Maven Smart System for the Pentagon, via contracts it won last year valued at about $580 million. Maven pulls together data and uses AI to speed up target identification for intelligence analysts. Palantir has long worked with the Department of Homeland Security as well.

Anduril, a defense tech startup, designs sensor towers and related software. Last fall, the company announced it had deployed 300 autonomous versions of these towers for U.S. Customs and Border Protection, detecting and tracking objects of interest through radar and other technology.

In recent months, Palantir, Anduril, Elon Musk’s SpaceX and other newer contractors have discussed a consortium to jointly bid for U.S. defense deals and outcompete the Beltway’s legacy players, according to a source familiar with the matter.

Myanmar quake death toll passes 1,600

China, India, Russia among countries helping

REUTERS

BANGKOK – Myanmar’s military rulers let in hundreds of foreign rescue personnel on Saturday after an earthquake killed more than 1,600 people, the deadliest natural disaster to hit the impoverished, war-torn country in years.

Friday’s 7.7 magnitude quake, among the biggest to jolt the Southeast Asian nation in the last century, crippled airports, bridges and highways amid a civil war that has wrecked the economy and displaced millions.

The death toll in Myanmar climbed to 1,644, the military government said on Saturday, according to BBC Burmese news service.

In neighboring Thailand, where the quake rattled buildings and brought down a skyscraper under construction in the capital Bangkok, at least nine people were killed.

Survivors in Mandalay, Myanmar’s second-biggest city, dug with their bare hands on Friday in desperate attempts to save those still trapped, lacking heavy machinery and with authorities absent.

In Bangkok on Saturday, rescue operations continued at the site of the 33-story tower’s collapse, where 47 people were either missing or trapped under the rubble – including workers from Myanmar.

The U.S. Geological Service’s predictive modeling estimated Myanmar’s death toll could exceed 10,000 and losses could exceed the country’s annual economic output.

A day after making a rare call for international assistance, Myanmar’s junta chief, Senior General Min Aung Hlaing, traveled to hard-hit Mandalay near the epicenter of the quake, which brought down buildings and triggered fires in some areas.

“The Chairman of the State Administration Council instructed authorities to expedite search and rescue efforts and address any urgent needs,” the junta said in a statement on state media, referring to Min Aung Hlaing.

Airports closed

An initial assessment by Myanmar’s opposition National Unity Government said at least 2,900 buildings, 30 roads and seven bridges had been damaged by the quake.

“Due to significant damage, Naypyitaw and Mandalay international airports are temporarily closed,” said the NUG, which includes remnants of the elected civilian government ousted by the military in a 2021 coup that triggered the civil war.

The control tower at the airport in Naypyitaw, Myanmar’s purpose-built capital city, collapsed, rendering it inoperable, a person with knowledge of the situation told Reuters.

A Myanmar junta spokesman did not respond to calls seeking comment.

A Chinese rescue team arrived at the airport in Myanmar’s commercial capital of Yangon, hundreds of miles from Mandalay and Naypyitaw, and will travel up country by bus, state media said.

Chinese President Xi Jinping spoke by phone with the junta chief, China’s embassy in Myanmar said on Saturday, and said Beijing would provide $13.77 million worth of aid, including tents, blankets and emergency medical kits.

The United States, which has a testy relationship with the Myanmar military and has sanctioned its officials, including Min Aung Hlaing, has said it would provide some assistance.

Relief supplies from India on a military aircraft also landed in Yangon, according to Myanmar state media, and India’s government said it was also dispatching ships with about 44 tons of humanitarian aid.

Russia, Malaysia and Singapore were also sending planeloads of relief supplies and personnel.

The Association of Southeast Asian Nations, a 10-country bloc that includes Myanmar, said that it recognized the urgent need for humanitarian assistance. “ASEAN stands ready to support relief and recovery efforts,” the group said a statement.

South Korea said it would provide an initial $2 million in humanitarian aid to Myanmar through international organizations.

‘No help coming’

Residents in the hardest hit areas are desperate for the help.

The quake, which hit around lunchtime on Friday, affected wide swaths of Myanmar, from the central plains around Mandalay to the hills of Shan in the east, parts of which are not completely under the junta’s control.

Rescue operations in Mandalay could not match the scale of the disaster, one resident said by phone, asking not to be named because of security concerns.

“Many people are trapped, but there is no help coming just simply because there isn’t manpower or equipment or vehicles,” he said.

In Bangkok, 620 miles from the epicenter, authorities on Saturday pushed ahead with efforts to find construction workers trapped under the rubble of the collapsed tower, using excavators, drones and search-and-rescue dogs.

Thailand’s Deputy Prime Minister Anutin Charnvirakul said all possible resources had been deployed to search for survivors and to bring out bodies of the deceased.

“We always have hope,” he told reporters. “We’re still working around the clock.”

Chanpen Kaewnoi, 39, said she rushed over on Friday afternoon after seeing news reports that the under-construction building where her mother and younger sister were working had collapsed.

“I called my sister, but no matter how many times I tried to call her there was no connection,” she said after a sleepless night at the site.

“I want to wait for my mother and sister,” said Chanpen, herself a construction worker, “I want to see their faces again.”

Across the sprawling metropolis, where such quakes are rare, there may be up to 5,000 damaged buildings, including residential towers, said Anek Siripanichgorn, a board member of Council of Engineers Thailand, which is helping municipal authorities.

“We are going through hundreds of cases,” he said. “If we see cases where there is potential danger, we will immediately send engineers.”

Fighter pilots call out Hegseth over Signal chat

They say ‘spillage’ of info put US troops in danger

Cybele Mayes-Osterman
USA TODAY

WASHINGTON – Former F/A-18 fighter pilots say they’re stunned by Defense Secretary Pete Hegseth’s decision to share details of impending airstrikes this month with a group chat on a commercially available texting app.

“It’s appalling,” said Richard Westmoreland, a retired Marine lieutenant colonel who flew similar missions over Iraq and the former Yugoslavia.

“This was a tremendous breach,” said Guy Ravey, who served in the Marines from 1997 to 2017, including three tours flying combat missions in Iraq. “I’ve never seen one worse ... and at such a high level.”

Hegseth faces a mountain of criticism after he texted key details of plans to strike the Houthi militant movement in Yemen on March 15, including the exact times airstrikes would begin and the types of weapons that would be used. The messages became public after Jeffrey Goldberg of The Atlantic magazine revealed on March 24 that national security adviser Mike Waltz had added him to a chat with the Trump administration’s top national security officials on the encrypted app Signal.

As outrage grows in Washington over the Signal incident, Hegseth and other members of the chat, including Director of National Intelligence Tulsi Gabbard and CIA Director John Ratcliffe, have maintained that no classified information was shared on the chat. On Wednesday, The Atlantic published a follow-up article with Hegseth’s exact language, which included the timing of the strikes and the fact that F/A-18 Hornet attack jets were carrying the weapons.

“TIME NOW (1144et): Weather is FAVORABLE. Just CONFIRMED w/CENTCOM we are a GO for mission launch,” read one of Hegseth’s messages. “1536 F-18 2nd Strike Starts – also, first sea-based Tomahawks launched,” read another.

Despite mounting concerns among lawmakers, Hegseth has continued to deny the information he shared was classified.

“Nobody’s texting war plans,” he told reporters during a trip to Hawaii on Tuesday, calling Goldberg “deceitful and highly discredited.”

The fighter pilots vehemently disagreed.

“It’s so reckless,” said Amy McGrath, a former Democratic candidate for U.S. Senate from Kentucky who served as a Marine pilot in two combat tours in Afghanistan and one in Iraq.

Launch times – which Hegseth texted on the chat – are when pilots are most “vulnerable,” she said. “You’re putting your people at risk needlessly.”

Westmoreland said the information Hegseth shared is “100%” either secret or top secret.

“This is not something you’re going to discuss out in the open. It’s not something you’re going to discuss with the maintenance folks.”

“I stake my career on that,” he said.

Another retired 20-year Marine lieutenant colonel who flew more than 150 combat missions said Hegseth’s messages on the Signal chat appeared to come from the air tasking order – the execution schedule of planned missions. That information is always classified – either secret or top secret, he said.

The retired lieutenant colonel said Hegseth appeared to have added real-time updates from a secure Defense Department messaging system – a huge breach of security. He asked to speak anonymously for fear of retaliation.

Matt Holcomb, a 15-year Navy pilot who flew missions in the Middle East and Pacific, said he struggled to understand how Hegseth and others could have failed to verify who was in the chat.

Regardless of whether the information shared was classified, “there’s an operational security issue,” he said.

Ravey said Hegseth, Waltz or other members of the chat should have immediately reported the information “spillage” as soon as it was discovered.

“Those people have failed at multiple levels,” he said.

Risk to pilots ‘very high’

Former pilots said Hegseth’s texts translated to a real-time risk for pilots flying the Houthi strike mission.

“It could have compromised the operation,” Holcomb said.

A breach of classified information that gave Houthi targets just 20 to 30 minutes of advance notice would have allowed them to prepare air defenses, Westmoreland said. While the Houthis can’t man their air defense weapons “24/7,” the majority of “the game is (knowing) when there’s something likely to happen,” he said.

“The potential to get somebody shot down – very high,” he said.

Former pilots who flew missions in Iraq said the pilots carrying out the Houthi strikes could face a higher level of danger than those on similar missions they flew during the Iraq War.

With military support from Iran, the Houthis have increased their air defense capabilities in recent years, according to U.S. intelligence assessments. Former senior-level national security officials told USA TODAY the information breach could have allowed Houthi targets to evade the strikes or attack U.S. troops.

Even among personnel directly involved in operations such as the strikes on the Houthis, information is carefully restricted to those with a need to know, the former pilots said. The information pilots receive as they prepare for a mission is the culmination of days, weeks or even months of intelligence gathering and logistical planning.

Mishandling national defense information is illegal under the Espionage Act. For members of the military, a breach of classified information is cause for dismissal and, in some cases, serious charges. Jack Teixeira, an Air National Guard member who leaked classified information online, was sentenced to 15 years in prison last November.

“Everybody who’s given access to classified material is taught from Day 1 how to handle it, how to store it and how to safeguard it,” Ravey said. “We know that the consequences for failing to do so are quite severe, and rightfully so.”

Sylvia Betz
CINCINNATI - With heavy hearts, we share the passing of Sylvia Betz, a cherished member of the St. Xavier High School community. From 1969 to 2020, Sylvia dedicated her life to the mission and values of St. X, leaving an indelible mark on generations of students, faculty, and staff. Sylvia passed away on Saturday, March 22, 2025 at age 78. Visitation will be held at St. Clare Church, 1443 Cedar Avenue, Cincinnati, Ohio 45224 on Friday, April 4, 2025 from 10:00 AM until Mass of Christian Burial at 10:30 AM. Ronald William O'Donnell
NEW RICHMOND - Ronald "Ronnie" William O'Donnell, 88, born March 18, 1936, son of the late William "Bill" O'Donnell and Cora Jourdan (O'Donnell) Marcum, brother of the late Peggy Marcum, died March 11, 2025 after a year of health struggles. He is survived by his daughters with former wife Priscilla S. Reed: Jennifer Reed O'Donnell, Kelly Elizabeth O'Donnell, and Stacey Marie O'Donnell, as well as his life partner Elizabeth "Leba" Brevoort Crawford.

Born in Norwood, Ronnie had fond memories of youthful adventures in downtown Cincinnati and Spring Grove. A graduate of Hughes High School, he served in the Army in Korea (June 1953 July 1956). He started a family in Hyde Park while studying to become an electrician. A proud member of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (IBEW Local Union 212), he worked at the former Walter C. Beckjord Generating Station and contributed to the construction of the William H. Zimmer Nuclear Power Station. Retirement years were filled with much love and joy with Leba whose sons, Ronnie and Michael Crawford, both distinguished U.S. soldiers, he greatly admired.

Ronnie never shied from a challenge. At 33, he purchased 40 acres in New Richmond, Ohio, and became a gentleman farmer. Gifted at many skills, he learned to hunt, shoot, fish, boat, build fences, clear fields, garden, fly planes, and repair and maintain a multitude of vehicles. He especially loved animals, 35mm photography, and jazz. WNOP's 740 a.m. radio station was a constant presence in the garage and barn. There was not a tractor he couldn't ride, a creek he couldn't ford, or a tree he wouldn't fell if it was in his way. When running electric fence to contain livestock he taught his daughters, "Current flows the least line of resistance." He was also a charming storyteller with an uncanny ability to craft the perfect nickname (Swaps, Spook, Whitie, and Flopsy, to name a few). He leaves behind many great friends. "See you later, alligator."

Michael R. Schmidt
CINCINNATI - Michael R. ("Mike") Schmidt, 73, passed away suddenly at home in Cincinnati on March 21, 2025. A proud graduate of St. Xavier High School, Xavier University, and the Salmon P. Chase College of Law, Mike practiced law for over four decades in downtown Cincinnati. Mike left a legacy of craftsmanship, decency and service in his law practice, and believed strongly in supporting Legal Aid and Volunteer Lawyers for the Poor. Mike engaged in service in many other ways, including his work at St. Vincent DePaul, reading for the blind, and for a number of community civic associations. Mike believed that it was possible to be an excellent trial lawyer and good person, demonstrating this by mentoring many young lawyers over the years, including his son. Mike was humble and soulful. He loved to hike in the woods and mountains, listening to jazz music, grilling steaks, travel and ballgames with his family. He adored few things more than Reds Opening Day with his son and grandson. Mike grew up working at his dad's business, the J.J. Schmidt Ice Cream Co. near old Crosley Field. He met his dear wife Judith (Spraul) as camp counselors at Fort Scott Camp outside of Cincinnati when they were teenagers. Mike is preceded in death by his beloved daughter, Julia, and his parents Ted and Clare Schmidt. He is survived by his wife, Judith, his son, Stephen (Regan), his three grandchildren Sebastian, Scarlett and Audrey, and his sister Marcie. Mike's spirit will live on in their hearts and minds. Join us in celebrating Mike's beautiful life and legacy on Saturday, April 5th at St. Xavier Church, 611 Sycamore Street, Cincinnati, OH 45202. His family will receive visitors at 9:00 AM, with Mass to follow at 10:00 AM. Burial will follow at Spring Grove Cemetery. In lieu of flowers, donations can be made in honor of Mike's daughter Julia to: The Julia E. Schmidt Scholarship Fund at St. Ursula Academy, 1339 East McMillan Street, Cincinnati, OH 45206. Mary L Heist

PARK HILLS - Our beloved Mary Loraine “Sis” Heist (nee Kremer), 83, daughter of Urban and Loraine (Lange) Kremer, passed away peacefully at home on Wednesday, March 26, 2025. Sis was the loving wife of over 60 years to her devoted husband, Robert Warren Heist. She was the cherished mother of five rascally, kind, and devoted children: Mike Heist (Teri), Amy Hoerlein (Robert), Rob Heist, Tom Heist (Elizabeth), and Emily Leidolf (Justin). She was the devoted Grandmother to a growing pile of lovable and equally devoted Grandchildren: Jenna Parker (Greg), Jon Hoerlein (Alisa), Henry Heist, Hayden Heist, Eva Leidolf, Caroline Leidolf, and Great-Grandchildren: James Parker, with another sweet Hoerlein great grandbaby on the way. Sis was also the much beloved sister to Marcia Smith, Don Kremer, Diane Kraft, Karen Schmal, and Kevin Kremer. And she was a sister-in-law to many and aunt to dozens more nephews and nieces. Alongside Warren, she co-owned Kremer’s Market, Crescent Springs beloved market and deli. She was the Queen of Fudge and the heart of a kitchen team that upheld her exacting standards. She set the bar for hospitality and warmth which is her legacy that Kremer’s Market continues for each and every neighbor served. She was a committed friend and neighbor. She was generous with her love, serving as a second mother to a host of neighborhood kids ensuring all were fed, safe, and having a ball. She was steadfast in her friendships, staying close to old pals and distant friends alike, and enjoying the weekly gatherings with her high school girlfriends. She was a master of crossword puzzles and a lover of yellow tulips. Her smile was the biggest. She was endlessly kind yet suffered no fools. Unfailingly polite, she could nevertheless get a needed point across with an admirable wit and a sly turn of phrase. Many experienced the delayed chuckle when it finally dawned on them just exactly what she had truly meant. Besides a good glass of red wine, the Maine coast, and lobster, her greatest joy was her family. She and Warren lived a life full of adventure and good-natured mischievousness - surviving cross-country road trips, Navy reunions, lively family gatherings, and good-natured escapades in search of good times. And maybe most importantly for her, the care she took in raising her children lives on - the values of love, hard work, and generosity she instilled live on as her greatest legacy. We love her. We miss her. Visitation will be held on Wednesday, April 2, 2025, from 10:00 a.m. until the Mass of Christian Burial at 11:30 a.m., with Father Dan Noll officiating, at St. Agnes Church. Burial will follow at St. John Cemetery. A reception will be held immediately after Mass at The Gardens of Park Hills. In lieu of flowers, the family requests donations be made to St. Elizabeth Hospice in her memory.

Art Coulter

Art Coulter, passed away on March 17, 2025, in Englewood, Ohio, after a lengthy battle with dementia. Born on November 1, 1941, in Middletown, Ohio, Art lived a life filled with laughter, service, and love. A proud veteran, Art served honorably in the U.S. Marine Corps during the Vietnam War, a time which shaped his character and instilled in him a deep sense of duty and commitment. After returning from military service, he went on to dedicate his professional career to the Hamilton County Sheriff’s Department, retiring as a Deputy Sheriff after 26 years, where he was known for his dedication to community safety and his approachable nature. Art’s personality was a tapestry woven with humor and kindness. Renowned for his wit, he delighted in telling jokes and was often recognized for his sarcastic, yet gentle, demeanor. Many would remark that he would give you the shirt off his back, a testament to his generous spirit. Art was loved by all who knew him, his warmth and comedic flair leaving a lasting imprint on those fortunate enough to cross his path. Art had a variety of interests that showcased his diverse passions. He was an active member of the F.O.P. Lodge in Cincinnati, a lifelong NRA member, and an enthusiast of ham radio. His love for shopping for antiques and photography revealed his appreciation for history and capturing moments, allowing him to connect with the world around him in unique ways. Art leaves behind his children, John (Mollie) Coulter, Michael Coulter, and Jeanette (Geoffrey) Dawson; his granddaughter, Payton Coulter; his brother-in-law, Jerry (Sherrie) Zbikowski; numerous nieces and nephews, Mary Lewis, Dan Coulter, Rita Keeker, Bill (Christina) Zbikowski, Lauren (Brandon) Hardin, and Katie (Matthew) Andrews, along with several great-nieces and nephews who will carry forward his legacy of love and laughter. Art was preceded in death by his parents, John and Charlotte Coulter; his wife of 32 years, Donna Coulter; his brothers, Donald Coulter and David Coulter; and his sister, Phyllis Hemsher. In remembering Art, we celebrate a man who embodied compassion, humor, and enduring love for his family and friends. His spirit will forever resonate within the hearts of those who had the privilege to know him. In lieu of flowers, donations may be made in Art’s memory to the Miami County Ohio Animal Shelter. The family will receive friends on Monday, April 7, 2025 from 10:30-11:30am at the Newcomer North Chapel, 4104 Needmore Rd, Dayton, OH 45424. A memorial service will follow at 11:30am. Immediately after, Art will be laid to rest at Calvary Cemetery in Dayton with military honors. To send a special message, please visit www.NewcomerDayton.com.

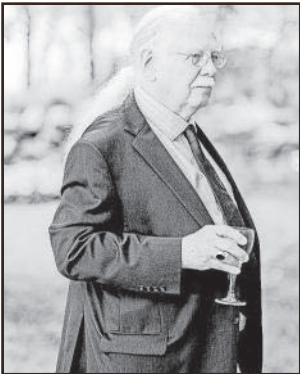

Gladys “Jeff” Lazarow

MENDOTA HEIGHTS - Gladys (“Jeff”) Lazarow, 96, passed away on March 27, 2025. She is preceded in death by her loving husbands Nelson Lackritz and Theodore (Ted) Lazarow. She is survived by her 3 daughters Wendy Darling, Karen Lackritz, and Eve Lackritz; 5 grandchildren and their spouses; and 4 great grandchildren. Graveside services will be held Sunday, March 30, 2025 at 10:00AM at United Jewish Cemetery Montgomery, 7885 Ivygate Lane Montgomery, Ohio 45242. www.weilkahnfuneralhome.com

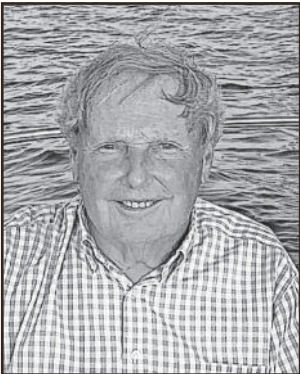

Thomas R. Moorman

CINCINNATI - Beloved husband of his wife of 45 years, the late Tonia (Huff) Moorman. Loving brother of Judith A. Moorman and Linda Greene, brother-in-law of Sherri Kluesener. Uncle of Wayne (Amy) Moorman-Minton, Tim (Angela) Minton, Melissa Kluesener, Sara (Paul) Kluesener, Gregory (Brittany) Kluesener. Also survived by 11 great nieces and Nephews, and many friends. Died suddenly on March 18, 2025, at the age of 79. Tom spent his career with the Public Library of Cincinnati and Hamilton County, retiring as the Coordinator of Staff and Training Development. His dedication to the Library continued after his retirement as a volunteer with The Friends Used Book Store at the Warehouse. Burial was private. Remembrances can be made to Friends of the Public Library of Cincinnati and Hamilton County, 8456 Vine Street 45216.

Joseph A Kropp

CINCINNATI - Beloved Veterinarian, Devoted Family Man, Proud Irish-American, Lifelong Bengals Fan. Joseph A. Kropp, age 81, passed away peacefully, surrounded by family. Born in New York and raised in Cincinnati, Joe lived a life marked by quiet strength, compassion, and deep devotion to the people and places he loved. He is survived by his wife, Pat; his brother, John; and his three children, Leslie, JB, and Blair; along with six grandchildren Finn, Paige, Piper, Adair, Teagan, and Colm.

A proud graduate of The Ohio State University College of Veterinary Medicine, Joe dedicated his professional life to caring for animals, specializing in thoroughbred racehorses. He managed the Frisch’s horse farm and brought great care and knowledge to every stable he walked into. A true entrepreneur at heart, Joe also founded the Great Time Family Fun Center and enjoyed building homes on the side.

Joe was a proud dual Irish citizen and a man of Catholic faith, which grounded his values and guided his life. He married the love of his life, Patricia Ann Kobilarcsik, and they were together for 59 years.

After retiring from practicing veterinary medicine, Joe donated his time to several charities. One in particular that he enjoyed was Our Daily Bread. Every Wednesday, he would go to Busken Bakery to pick up unsold food from the day before and deliver it to Our Daily Bread’s Over-the-Rhine location.

Joe had a passion for a fast round of golf and could often be found on the course, enjoying the game as much for the camaraderie as for the scorecard. A lifelong Cincinnati Bengals fan, he proudly wore orange and black during every game-day.

Above all, Joe was a family man. He listened and was always there to give great advice.

He will be deeply missed by all who knew him.

A celebration of Joe’s life will be held 10 a.m. on April 4, 2025 at St. Rose Church; 2501 Riverside Drive, Cincinnati 45202. Visitation will begin at 8 a.m. In lieu of flowers, the family invites you to spend time with someone you love, take a long walk, or cheer on the Bengals in his honor-preferably all three.

Peggy Ann Rankin

PARK HILLS - Peggy Ann Rankin, 66, of Park Hills, KY, passed away peacefully on March 13, 2025, after a long battle with cancer. Born in Ft. Wright, KY, on January 18, 1959, Peggy was the beloved wife of 31 years to Marc Tischbein. She was the daughter of the late Jane and Jim Rankin and is survived by her sister, Nancy (Kent) Seifried. She was a proud aunt to Blake (Erin) Seifried, Kyle (Anne) Seifried, Brett Seifried, and Courtney (Brad) Swederska, all of whom loved her dearly.

Peggy’s professional life was marked by her hard work, dedication, and entrepreneurial spirit. After beginning her college studies at Hanover College in Indiana, she transferred to Xavier University where she earned a degree in marketing and business. Upon entering the workforce, she worked for Jim Fulcher at Fulcher Insurance, where her passion for the industry led her to purchase the business and rename it Fulcher Rankin Insurance. Over the course of her 42-year career, Peggy became known for her unwavering commitment to her clients, often serving multiple generations of families. Her kindness and generosity made her beloved by all who knew her.

Outside of her professional life, Peggy was known for her vibrant personality and her love of life. She spent many years playing tennis at Five Seasons and enjoyed living in a historical home on the Covington riverfront, surrounded by the beauty of her meticulously maintained gardens. She shared her life with her two beloved dachshunds, Hershe and Pippa, and later, she and Marc built a new home in Park Hills where they created a sanctuary filled with flowers and the joy of watching their dogs swim.

Peggy had a passion for boating, particularly on the Ohio River and at Lake Cumberland, and she cherished winter vacations in Marco Island, FL, with close friends. She was also an avid shopper, always on the lookout for a great deal, and she loved preparing home-cooked meals for her family.

Peggy’s warmth, kindness, and generosity touched the lives of all who knew her. She never met a stranger, and her spirit of kindness will be deeply missed by her family, friends, and the countless individuals whose lives she impacted.

A Celebration of Life will be held to honor Peggy’s memory and the many good times she shared with those she loved.

She will forever be remembered for her radiant personality, her caring heart, and her unwavering love for those around her.

GOP lawmakers lukewarm on Greenland plans

Many see advantages to US access but rule out military force to annex it

Riley Beggin
USA TODAY

WASHINGTON – President Donald Trump doubled down on his interest in acquiring Greenland, telling reporters in the Oval Office last week that “we’ll go as far as we have to go” to get the Arctic territory. Vice President JD Vance and his wife were in Greenland on Friday for a diplomatic visit that has drawn world-wide attention.

But on Capitol Hill, Republican lawmakers who would likely need to sign off on any deal are not quite so gung-ho about formally connecting the U.S. to Earth’s largest island.

“I think it’s impractical,” said Sen. Thom Tillis, R-N.C., noting that Denmark – which has territorial control – and Greenland residents have “stated their own objections.”

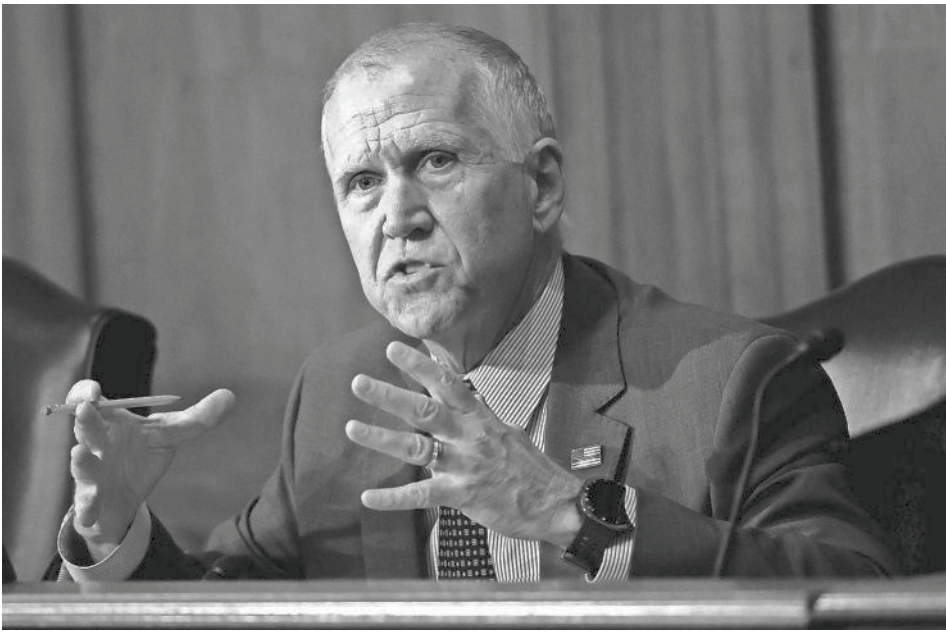

Instead, the swing-state senator said that the U.S. used to have more than a dozen military bases in Greenland and now has only one, a missile defense base.

“Why don’t we talk about the real need to have power projection for the Arctic, and Greenland being a great platform for doing that, tapping on our history?” Tillis said.

Like Tillis, most GOP lawmakers who spoke with USA TODAY see the strategic advantage of the U.S. having increased access to the island – if Greenland can be convinced. None endorsed using military force or economic coercion to annex Greenland, which Trump has refused to rule out.

“Greenland is a quasi-sovereign part of another country. It just doesn’t seem like the kind of thing that we can impose on somebody,” said Sen. Kevin Cramer, R-N.D. “We can certainly make offers and gestures and see what’s possible, and I think that’s all well and good.”

Trump’s interest in Greenland has come along with other targets for U.S. expansion: The president has also proposed annexing the Panama Canal and Canada, and has renamed the Gulf of Mexico the Gulf of America.

U.S. Sen. Thom Tillis, R-N.C., called proposals for the U.S. to annex Greenland “impractical,” given the objections of Denmark and the island’s residents.
KEVIN DIETSCH/GETTY IMAGES

Greenland’s position in the Arctic Circle is growing increasingly advantageous, as melting ice has made it easier for ships to navigate the area between Asia, Europe and North America. The United States’ geopolitical rivals, China and Russia, have shown interest in expanding their presence in the region.

Greenland is also packed with the minerals necessary to produce many modern technologies, such as cell-phones, batteries and electric vehicles, and may have access to large quantities of untapped oil and gas.

That’s why Trump has said “we have to have” Greenland, including pushing to annex the territory during his first term as president. He’s offered to buy it from Denmark, as the United States bought the U.S. Virgin Islands from Denmark for $25 million in gold coins in 1917.

But Denmark, which is a longtime ally of the U.S. and a founding member of NATO, has rejected the proposal. And the people of Greenland, most of whom want independence from Denmark, overwhelmingly oppose becoming a part of the United States. Nearly half of Americans also oppose annexing Greenland, according to a recent Yahoo

News poll, while a plurality of Republicans support it.

There are several ways Greenland could formally join the United States. The island could vote for independence from Denmark and ask to join the U.S. as a state, which would require Congress to pass a law admitting it. The U.S. could also attempt to lease Greenland from Denmark with its consent, as China leased Hong Kong to the British in the 20th century, or buy it outright, which would likely require a treaty ratified by two-thirds of the Senate and appropriations from Congress.

Or the U.S. could invade Greenland – a scenario that would trigger the mutual defense clause from NATO and which would require congressional approval if it took more than 60 days. Trump said during his joint address to Congress that he “strongly” supported Greenland’s “right to determine your own future.”

A planned trip by second lady Usha Vance and her son to cultural and historical sites in Greenland last week was described by local officials as a “provocation” and “highly aggressive,” given Trump’s stated desire to acquire the Danish territory. The vice president joined the trip and said the visit would be limited to the U.S. military base. Experts say Greenlanders are largely open to U.S. investments in mining, tourism and fisheries, even as they oppose a takeover. The U.S. also has the right to construct more military bases in Greenland as long as Denmark and Greenland are notified.

Many Republican lawmakers said they agreed with the administration that it would be good for the U.S. if Greenland was annexed.

“It kind of gets us back to the Monroe Doctrine, making sure that we have protection in our own backyard and that we’re maximizing the ability to acquire natural resources,” said Sen. Eric Schmitt, R-Mo., referring to the fifth president of the United States who in his 1823 State of the Union address warned foreign powers that any intervention in U.S. political affairs would be seen as a hostile act.

Before Trump even took office, Rep. Andy Ogles, R-Tenn., introduced the Make Greenland Great Again Act, which would authorize Trump to negotiate with Denmark to annex Greenland and automatically approve of the agreement if Congress doesn’t reject it within 60 days. It has 16 GOP co-sponsors. The measure is unlikely to advance in the Senate, where 60 votes are necessary to clear the filibuster.

Still, multiple lawmakers suggested the administration is not trying to force Greenland to join with the U.S.

“What everybody’s talking about is how can we make Greenland a really strategic partner of the United States,” Schmitt said. “That’s what the discussion is.”

A Compact of Free Association, like the U.S. has with the Marshall Islands, Palau and Micronesia, “would be a good model for a strategic partnership with Greenland,” said Rep. Andy Barr, R-Ky., a member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee.

“We’d love to have them be part of the United States if they wanted to,” said Sen. Markwayne Mullin, R-Okla., who serves on Senate panels overseeing federal spending and the Pentagon. “But at the end of the day, it’s going to be their decision.”

FAA to investigate another close call near DC airport

WASHINGTON – The Federal Aviation Administration said it will investigate a close call that occurred on Friday between a Delta Air Lines flight and a U.S. Air Force jet near Reagan Washington National Airport.

The incident follows a midair collision on Jan. 29 near the same airport involving a passenger jet a U.S. Army helicopter, which killed 67 in the first deadly U.S. passenger airline crash in 16 years.

A series of troubling near-miss incidents over the past two years has raised concerns about U.S. aviation safety and the strain on understaffed air traffic control operations.

On Friday, Delta Flight 2389, an Airbus A319 headed for Minneapolis, was cleared for takeoff around 3:15 p.m. ET, while four U.S. Air Force T-38 Talons were inbound to nearby Arlington National Cemetery for a flyover, the FAA said. The Delta jet received a cockpit collision warning alert that another aircraft was nearby, and controllers issued corrective instructions to both aircraft, it said.

U.S. Sen. Amy Klobuchar, who represents Minnesota, called the incident “unbelievably dangerous and thank God people are safe. My first call to Department of Defense tomorrow: Why are your planes flying 500 feet below passenger jets full of Minnesotans?”

The Pentagon said it was aware of reports about Friday’s incident but did not have an immediate comment.

Delta, which said there were five crew members and 131 passengers on board, said “the flight crew followed procedures to maneuver the aircraft as instructed. ... We will cooperate with regulators and aviation stakeholders in any review of this flight.”

CNN, citing audio captured by website LiveATC.net, reported the Delta pilot asked controllers if there was “an actual aircraft about 500 feet below us” as the commercial jet left the airport. The controller responded “affirmative,” CNN said.

The January collision raised question about the military’s failure to use a key safety system known as ADS-B on helicopter training flights.

The FAA has since imposed permanent restrictions on nonessential helicopter operations around Reagan and barred helicopters and passenger jets from flying near each other. The FAA’s actions followed two urgent safety recommendations made by the National Transportation Safety Board after the collision.

Judge halts deportation of Tufts doctoral student

Order comes as matter of jurisdiction questioned

BOSTON – A federal judge in Massachusetts on Friday temporarily barred the deportation of a Turkish doctoral student at Tufts University who voiced support for Palestinians in Israel’s war in Gaza and was detained by U.S. immigration officials last week.

Rumeysa Ozturk, 30, was taken into custody by immigration authorities near her Massachusetts home on Tuesday, according to a video showing the arrest by masked federal agents. U.S. officials revoked her visa.

The Department of Homeland Security has accused Ozturk, without providing evidence, of “engaging in activities in support of Hamas,” a group the government categorizes as a “foreign terrorist organization.”

Ozturk’s arrest came a year after she co-authored an opinion piece in Tufts’ student newspaper criticizing the university’s response to calls by students to divest from companies with ties to Israel and to “acknowledge the Palestinian genocide.”

Oncu Keceli, a spokesperson for Turkey’s foreign ministry, said efforts to secure Ozturk’s release continued, adding consular and legal support was being provided by Turkish diplomatic missions in the U.S.

“Our Houston Consul General visited our citizen in the center where she is being held in Louisiana on March 28. Our citizen’s requests and demands have been forwarded to local authorities and her lawyer,” Keceli said in a post on X.

A lawyer sued to secure her release, and on Friday, the American Civil Liberties Union joined her legal defense team, filing a revised lawsuit saying her detention violates her rights to free speech and due process.

Massachusetts without 48 hours’ notice, she is now in Louisiana.

In Friday’s order, U.S. District Judge Denise Casper in Boston said that to provide time to resolve whether her court retained jurisdiction over the case, she was barring Ozturk’s deportation temporarily.

She ordered the Trump administration to respond to Ozturk’s complaint by Tuesday.

Mahsa Khanbabai, a lawyer for Ozturk, called the decision “a first step in getting Rumeysa released and back home to Boston so she can continue her studies.”

The DHS had no immediate comment.

President Donald Trump has pledged to deport foreign pro-Palestinian protesters and has accused them of supporting Hamas, being antisemitic and posing foreign policy hurdles.

Protesters, including some Jewish groups, say the Trump administration conflates their criticism of Israel’s assault on Gaza and their advocacy for Palestinian rights with antisemitism and support for Hamas.

Several students and protesters have had their visas revoked by the Trump administration, which says it may have revoked over 300 visas.

Transplant patient dies from rabies

Mary Walrath-Holdridge
USA TODAY

A kidney transplant patient has died in Ohio after receiving an organ infected with rabies.

The patient received care in Lucas County, Ohio, in December 2024, the Toledo-Lucas County Health Department told USA TODAY in a statement. The patient was a Michigan resident and had received the organ from a donor who was not a resident of Ohio or Michigan, the Michigan Department of Health and Human Services also shared in a statement.

An investigation conducted by Michigan DHHS, the Ohio Department of Health, and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention found no risk to the public in either state.

“There is no threat to the general public. Health officials worked together to ensure that people, including health care providers, who were in contact with the Michigan individual were assessed for possible exposure to rabies,” Michigan DHHS spokesperson Lynn Sutfin told USA TODAY. “Post-exposure preventive care, if appropriate, has been provided.”

No further information about the donor or recipient is being released, she said.

The University of Toledo Medical Center confirmed to local news station WTOL that it was the hospital where the transplant was performed on Wednesday. In a statement to the outlet, it said the patient had died in January after undergoing a deceased donor organ transplant in late 2024.

“Person-to-person transmission of rabies is extremely rare, though it has been documented in a very small number of cases involving organ transplantation,” the statement said. “UToledo Health is committed to the safety and wellbeing of all our patients. The health system has worked closely with public health authorities and has conducted a thorough review of this case, which found all best practices and standard safety protocols were appropriately followed.”

Kara Steele, a representative from Life Connection of Ohio, also spoke with WTOL, saying that a donor risk assessment interview and physical assessment are conducted before any organ donation.

“(It gathers) a potential donor’s comprehensive medical and social history on top of a physical assessment and lab work in order to ensure the safety of organs for transplantation,” Steele told WTOL. “If an organ procurement organization received word from a transplant center concerning any recipient issues, the organ procurement organization would reach out to additional centers that transplanted other organs from a donor hero to see how their recipients are doing and then report back.”

This marked the first known case of rabies in a human in Ohio since 1970, according to the Ohio Department of Health, and the first case in Michigan since 2009. Because the recipient was not an Ohio resident, this will be counted as a human rabies case in Michigan, not Ohio.

disease that primarily affects the central nervous system, according to the CDC. It can lead to severe brain damage and death in humans and some animals.

In the United States, more than 90% of reported cases of rabies in animals occur in wildlife. We most commonly associate animals like bats, raccoons, skunks or foxes with being carriers. Human cases are exceedingly rare in the U.S., where fewer than 10 deaths are reported each year and at least 7 out of 10 of those are the result of exposure to an infected bat.

Because rabies vaccines are a legal requirement for dogs and cats in the U.S., cases in dogs are rare in the country. Worldwide, however, dogs are responsible for more than 95% of the estimated 70,000 annual human deaths caused by rabies.

Columbia University’s interim leader steps down

Ivy League school made concessions in feud with Trump over funds

Kanishka Singh
REUTERS

WASHINGTON – Columbia University’s interim president, Katrina Armstrong, has stepped down – a departure that comes one week after it agreed to significant changes amid a heated battle with the Trump administration over its federal funding.

The government this month canceled $400 million in funding for Columbia and threatened to withhold billions more, accusing the university of not doing enough to combat antisemitism and ensure student safety amid last year’s Gaza encampment campus protests.

Columbia made dramatic concessions this month so that it can negotiate to regain the funding, drawing harsh criticism that it had quickly caved to government pressure and not stood firm on academic freedom and free speech.

Board of Trustees Co-Chair Claire Shipman was appointed acting president with immediate effect while the board searches for a new president. The university did not give a reason for the change.

“I assume this role with a clear understanding of the serious challenges before us and a steadfast commitment to act with urgency, integrity, and work with our faculty to advance our mission, implement needed reforms, protect our students, and uphold academic freedom and open inquiry,” Shipman said in a statement.

Armstrong is returning to lead the university’s Irving Medical Center, Columbia University said.

Groups representing Columbia University professors on Tuesday sued Trump’s administration over its effort to force the university to tighten rules on campus protests and put a Middle Eastern studies department under outside oversight, among other measures.

Pro-Palestinian demonstrators march at Columbia University on Oct. 7, 2024. Columbia’s interim president stepped down Friday, a week after it announced measures to placate President Donald Trump.

Columbia was at the center of demonstrations in the summer of 2024 that spread around the United States. Protesters demanded an end to Israel’s military assault on Gaza and urged their colleges to divest from companies with ties to Israel.

Rights advocates raised concerns about antisemitism and Islamophobia during the protests and counterprotests.

The government has cracked down on foreign pro-Palestinian protesters, and Columbia University Palestinian graduate Mahmoud Khalil was detained earlier this month by federal immigration officials.

President Donald Trump has also threatened to withhold federal funding from other institutions over pro-Palestinian campus protests.

Separately, the New York Times reported late on Friday that two of the leaders of Harvard University’s Center for Middle Eastern Studies, director Cemal Kafadar and associate director Rosie Bsheer, will be leaving their positions. It cited two professors with direct knowledge of the moves.

Harvard had no immediate comment.

FDA struggling to meet its product review deadlines

Patrick Wingrove
REUTERS

Some U.S. health regulators who review medical devices and tobacco products for safety and efficacy are struggling to meet deadlines mandated by Congress due to Trump administration layoffs, three scientists working on the projects told Reuters.

On Thursday, the government said it will cut jobs across health agencies, including 3,500 at the Food and Drug Administration, a follow-up to earlier layoffs. Two of the scientists who work at the FDA said they had been assigned around double the number of new product applications for review since their colleagues were fired in February. They requested anonymity for fear of professional repercussions.

They said they were instructed to shelve other work, including oversight of other reviewers and providing early feedback on planned product applications before they are submitted for approval review.

One scientist at the FDA’s Center for Tobacco Products said the center had delayed starting new applications while staff worked on existing submissions, some with reviews that must be completed within 180 days under U.S. law. Several tobacco-related research projects have also been canceled, he said.

“We have 180 days to complete those (existing) reviews, and we’re not going to come anywhere close to that,” the scientist said. “It’s just not going to happen.”

The agency’s tobacco center is currently reviewing high-profile projects including one from Philip Morris International that seeks approval for a new iteration of its heated tobacco device IQOS.

A Philip Morris spokesperson said the average wait time for a tobacco-product application is closer to 700 days than 180 days. The FDA did not respond to a request for comment.

The Department of Government Efficiency, led by Elon Musk, fired around 1,000 probationary FDA employees last month, mostly from the agency’s cenis administered, which includes wound care, a dose of human rabies immune globulin, and a series of four or five rabies vaccines. It is nearly 100% effective if administered quickly after exposure.

Organ donation still safe

While a story like this is both scary and headline-catching, it’s important to put organ donation and its risks into perspective.

The United Network of Organ Sharing is the nonprofit organization that maintains and administers the only organ procurement and transplantation network in the United States. In 2024, it tracked more than 48,000 organ transplants performed.

In the same year, 27,759 kidney transplants were performed nationwide. Kidney transplant recipients have a one-year survival rate of 93%-98% and a five-year survival rate of 83%-92%, according to the Kidney Transplant Organization.

In Ohio, 26,498 kidney transplants have been done to date since 1988, and 1,293 were done in 2024 alone. So far this year, 206 kidney transplants have been performed in the state. Only one has been reportedly infected with rabies.

While the United Network of Organ Sharing has reported record donation numbers year-over-year, there is still far more need than supply. Currently, 104,668 people are waiting for a lifesaving organ on the transplant wait list. Of those, 58,660 people are active waiting list candidates, meaning they are eligible to immediately receive organ offers and undergo surgery. At least 16 people die a day waiting.

Organ donation is heavily regulated and overall safe. Like any medical procedure, there is the potential for surgery-related complications like bleeding and infection, according to the Mayo Clinic.

However, common myths that often deter people, such as the misconception that doctors will not try as hard to save your life if you’re a donor or the idea that people can pay large amounts of money to jump to the top of the list, have been repeatedly debunked.

The government on Thursday announced job cuts across health agencies, including 3,500 at the FDA. ANDREW KELLY/REUTERS FILE ters for tobacco, food and medical devices, before bringing some back.

Reuters could not confirm the final number of staff fired. The FDA had more than 20,000 workers earlier this year.

Ameet Sarpatwari, a professor at Harvard Medical School, said the FDA’s loss of personnel and institutional experience could lead the agency to spend longer on reviews, resulting in products coming to market later, or spend less time on individual applications, increasing the risk of missing red flags.

Eva Temkin, a lawyer at Arnold & Porter who advises clients on drug and medical device applications, said even if product reviewers are not terminated in the next round of layoffs, other FDA staff members like policy experts and legal counsel are critical to product review work.

“If this plan goes forward, I do expect to see missed user fee goals and commitments,” she said. She said the FDA had already canceled some meetings with companies or reverted to providing written responses only.

A lawyer specializing in FDA regulation, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said her clients at large medical device companies were deeply concerned that the FDA would start missing deadlines following February’s layoffs.

Vital fungi face risk of extinction, study shows

Emma Farge
REUTERS

GENEVA – Nearly a third of species of fungi assessed by an international conservation group are at risk of extinction from threats like deforestation and agricultural expansion, the latest “Red List” of threatened species showed on Thursday.

Fungi – which comprise a scientific “kingdom” second only in size to the animal kingdom – play a critical role in a range of functions from decomposition, to mammalian digestion to forest regeneration. For human beings, they also play an important role in making several powerful medicines, including antibiotics, as well as bread and beer.

Yet, the role of these yeasts, molds and mushrooms that underpin life on Earth has been “overlooked and underappreciated,” said the International Union for Conservation of Nature, which is trying to correct that.

In its latest “Red List,” which categorizes species according to the risks they face, the group said that nearly a third, or 411 of the 1,300 species of fungi it assessed, are at risk of extinction.

“Fungi are crucial to all life. Without fungi, an ecosystem can collapse quickly,” said Caroline Pollock, Senior Program Coordinator in IUCN’s Red List Unit.

Fungi are best known as mushrooms, but these are just the fruiting bodies of an organism whose bulk is found underground in a large network of root-like “mycelia” structures.

Only a fraction of some 2.5 million fungi species thought to exist have been formally identified, meaning that assessing the threats they face has been slow compared to flora and fauna.

One of the major challenges they face is that their habitats have been replaced by the expansion of urban areas and agriculture, whose nitrogen and ammonia runoff can also harm them, the IUCN said.

At least 198 species listed face extinction because of deforestation, it said. Even in places where rotational forestry is practiced, the destruction of old-growth forests sometimes does not allow their fungal colonies to become reestablished, it said.

Some fear cuts designed to destroy Social Security

Medora Lee
USA TODAY

Achieving government efficiency has been a mantra of President Donald Trump’s second term, but some people say the slashing of the Social Security Administration will have the opposite effect – or worse.

Last month, SSA announced a massive reorganization that would include “significant workforce reductions.” SSA said it set a staffing target of 50,000, down from the approximately 57,000 employees at the agency when it announced the cuts. SSA staffing was already down by more than 9% since 2015, according to the nonprofit AARP.

The latest reduction immediately set off alarm bells for some politicians, policy experts and Social Security consultants who warned the program’s 72.5 million Social Security beneficiaries could face a slowdown in the processing of benefits applications and longer waits for SSA help.

Sen. Patty Murray, D-Wash., vice chair of the Senate Appropriations Committee, stated in a news release that Social Security administrative expenses represent less than 1% of benefits paid – and about 0.2% of total government spending.

“Cutting Social Security staff and closing offices is not going to reduce the deficit or make the government more efficient,” Murray said. “Instead, it is making it harder for millions of Americans to apply for the benefits they have earned, and delayed processing.”

Not only has the agency cut staff and closed offices, according to the Department of Government Efficiency website, it has also introduced new identification policies that require people to come to field offices or access information online instead of calling. On Wednesday, SSA said it would delay implementing that highly criticized move.

Some experts said that could alienate older generations who aren’t as tech savvy, disabled Americans who may rely on disability payments, or people from rural communities.

Protesters rally for Social Security on March 22 in Port St. Lucie, Fla. Last month, the Social Security Administration announced a massive reorganization that would include significant workforce cuts. ERIC HASERT/TREASURE COAST NEWS “Requiring rural Americans to go into an office can mean having to take a day off of work and drive for hours merely to fill out paperwork,” AARP said in a statement March 19.

Several advocacy groups, including AARP, have urged the government to rethink these moves.

Trump’s administration insists the moves are aimed at preventing fraud and eliminating waste.

Critics, however, said the latest cuts only harm beneficiaries.

Already, SSA’s website crashed four times in 10 days this month, according to Accountable.US, a watchdog group.

Some lawmakers have suggested the cuts are a way to destroy Social Security and replace it with a privatized alternative.

Developments at SSA “leave us deeply concerned that ... the Trump Administration (is) setting up the SSA for failure – a failure that could cut off Social Security benefits for millions of Americans – and that will then be used to justify a ‘private sector fix,’” Sens. Ron Wyden, D-Ore., and Elizabeth Warren, D-Mass., wrote to Social Security commissioner nominee Frank Bismignano ahead of his hearing Tuesday before the Senate Finance Committee.

UK MEN’S BASKETBALL

COMMENTARY

Sad ending, but new beginning for UK

C.L. Brown
Louisville Courier Journal
USA TODAY NETWORK

INDIANAPOLIS — Kentucky basketball’s 78-65 loss to Tennessee in the NCAA Tournament Sweet 16 wasn’t the ending UK coach Mark Pope probably envisioned for his first season at the helm. But it’s really just the beginning. Pope erased any trepidation that a coach who had never won an NCAA Tournament game could handle the spotlight at Kentucky. That the program would struggle as it transitioned to learn a new approach of a new regime. That it would regress after 15 seasons of collectively having the best NBA talent just about every year under former coach John Calipari.

The euphoric highs of the first five years of the Calipari era might not ever repeat itself at UK or in all of college basketball.

That’s cool, though. Pope showed he has a different approach to winning that includes an innovative offense that fits more in line with how the game is played today.

The Wildcats ranked 10th in adjusted offensive efficiency according to KenPom.com, running a system of playing four and often five out with a group of players who had largely never done it before.

“We’ll be talking about these guys 10 years from now as the guys that came in here and set a standard of what this is supposed to be,” Pope said. “How you’re supposed to carry yourself as a Kentucky basketball player, how you’re supposed to connect yourself with your teammates. So we’ll lean heavily on this experience as a standard for all the guys that come in the future.”

For those UK fans keeping score, and there was definitely a group constantly peeking to see what Calipari was doing at Arkansas, both teams lost in the Sweet 16. Of course, none of that made losing to the Vols any easier.

Mark Pope led a quickly formed Kentucky team to the Sweet 16 in his first season as Wildcats head coach. “The University of Kentucky is in great hands,” guard Koby Brea said. GRACE SMITH/INDYSTAR

UK men’s basketball coach

Kentucky winning eight games against teams ranked in the top 15, which tied the program record, wasn’t by mistake. Pope assembled a team that probably won’t have any first-round picks and made it a top-10 team before injuries decimated its depth.

“This season, we were able to make history at the mecca of college basketball,” said Andrew Carr, who transferred from Wake Forest. “For us to be able to come in here and coach Pope’s first year and be able to do that, it’s been nothing short of amazing. I’m super excited to see for the next 10-15 years what kind of dominant run coach Pope can start.”

During the regular season, Pope was twice able to make up for Lamont Butler being out of the lineup and Carr being limited due to back problems and Jaxson Robinson’s wrist injury when the Cats beat the Vols. At Lucas Oil Stadium, he had no counter to how Tennessee hit them.

The scoring opportunities that seemed to come so easily through Pope’s designed sets were either taken away or heavily contested on Friday. UK made 12 3-pointers in both of its regular-season wins over Tennessee, but only managed six in its loss.

Kentucky’s defense that had made some strides late in the season, couldn’t piece together consecutive stops in order to mount a rally. And when it did manage to force a miss, the Vols grabbed 14 offensive rebounds and scored 19 second-chance points.

That’s an area that will have to improve, as the Cats ranked 13th in the SEC in adjusted defense, according to KenPom.com. But there are plenty of reasons to believe that Pope will have future teams that are tough defensively.

Who can forget the glimpse of Pope in the huddle in the closing seconds against Duke? He told his team if the Blue Devils’ all-everything forward Cooper Flagg was going to do a spin move that someone needed to be there for a steal. UK Otega Oweh made his words prophetic as he executed it to perfection to help seal the Cats’ win.

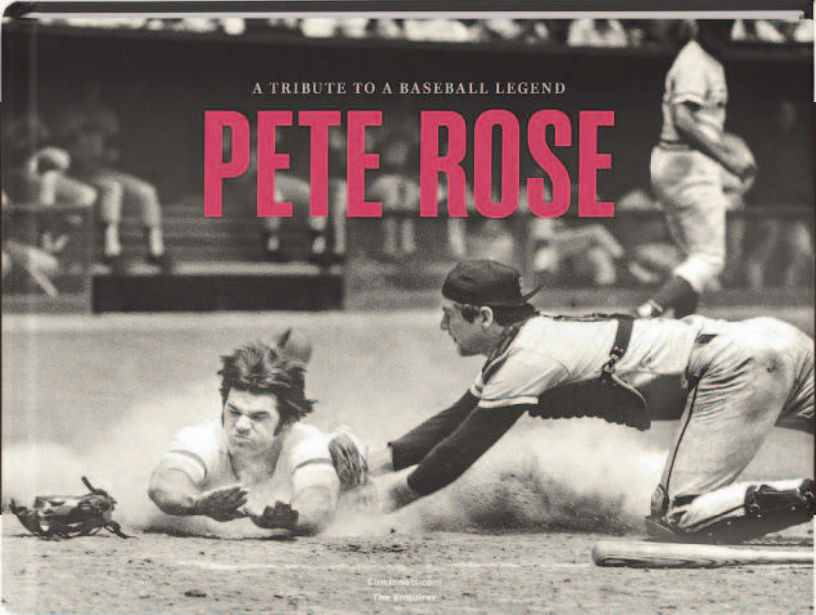

That was the first big moment Pope proved his bona fides.

It won’t be the last. “The University of Kentucky,” UK guard Koby Brea continued, “is in great hands.”

No one was sure of that a year ago when Pope was hired. They all are now.

REDS BASEBALL

Greene shows he could be key to season

Gordon Wittenmyer
Cincinnati Enquirer
USA TODAY NETWORK

Hunter Greene, the powerful star of the Cincinnati Reds pitching staff, did his job 100 mph at a time Thursday, and looked all but assured of his first win of the season when the ninth inning started.

Until reliever Ian Gibaut, the last pitcher to make the roster, earned the surprising call in the ninth for this would-be contender with no closer. By the time a 3-2 Reds lead turned into a 6-4 Opening Day loss to the Giants, Gibaut had his 10th blown save in 14 career chances and the weight of a brutal loss on his head.

Greene, a first-time All-Star last year, made a point to find Gibaut in the moments after.

“It impacts us a lot. It’s a big sting,” Greene said.

“But Ian’s a Dogg. That’s what I told him. I know people might not want to hear that, but people need to believe that, because he is.”

And it meant something to Gibaut, the reliever said, whether the gesture seemed necessary to anybody else, this brief, quiet message from a 25-year-old starter in his fourth big-league season to a 31-year-old journeyman reliever on his fifth team in seven seasons.

“I could easily not have done it and could have been selfish and stayed at my locker,” Greene said when asked why. “But that’s not who I am. That’s not my character. And I want him to know that I support him and I look past what happened today.”

The story of Opening Day for the Reds might turn out to be a storyline that gets an unwanted, extended run for this club if they don’t find a reliable replacement(s) for Alexis Diaz anytime soon.

But the Hunter Greene story might be the one that earns this team the extended run beyond the regular season that they have planned.

“If you have good starting pitching, then, yeah, there’s always those one or two guys that take the step forward and in some ways put (the rest of the staff) on their back and we go,” said Reds pitching coach Derek Johnson, who might have the deepest starting pitching staff in the National League Central.

“I definitely think we’ll see that.”

If Greene takes another step forward after turning a career corner last year that had him flirting with Cy Young contention in August, it’s hard to overstate the impact that could have on the competitive fortunes of a team that has a less-than-imposing hitting lineup and

Hunter Greene celebrates after striking out the side in the second inning Thursday. He pitched five innings, allowing a two-run home run among three hits given up, while striking out eight and walking one. SAM GREENE/THE ENQUIRER lesser-than-that fielding lineup.

On Thursday he struggled with his secondary stuff but found enough life and location in his fastball and just enough off-speed for show to strike out eight in five innings of work — a sixth inning taken off the table by the manager because of a pitch count extended by a 28-pitch fourth inning.

“I just tried to do my job and keep my team in the game,” said Greene, who left with the lead.

Along the way he retired nine of the first 10 batters he faced with seven strikeouts.

Whether having those kinds of results on a day he didn’t feel his sharpest says anything about what Greene might have in store for his fourth season after his breakthrough last year is impossible to know. Especially after one game.

But the Reds’ $53 million ace knows what that breakthrough meant for his preparation and expectations this year.

“Just more motivation,” he said. “I trained harder this offseason. My focus narrowed down even more to specifically who I am as a pitcher, what makes me tick.

“To sit here and act like you’ve got it all figured out after one good year would be foolish. The game’s too difficult to take that mindset,” he said. “If anything, you’ve got to channel it into more hard work and dedication to the craft.”

And maybe even to the team. A more focused approach to his work, yes, he said. But also to a winning team part of the process that Terry Francona has stressed since the team convened in spring training almost two months ago.

When asked Thursday what he took from his second Opening Day start, he said he didn’t know because he was still thinking about the tough loss for the team and fans.

“I really can’t answer that question because my mind’s not there,” he said.

As Greene has continued to learn and grow at the big-league level, this could be a major crossroads season for him and the team if he can back up last year, never mind take another stop.

Johnson said he likes what he’s seen so far, just in the difference he’s seen in the work Greene talked about.

“Coming into camp this year it was evident that his throwing program took a step forward. His bullpens have taken a step forward,” Johnson said. “Based on (the fact) last year was better than the year before, this year feels like it’s a click better than what it was last year.

“He’s more organized in his work. He has a plan for each day that he follows, and I think he’s pretty committed to it. Before you would see certain things that maybe were inconsistent.”

And then?

"What you're always hoping for is that with that, there becomes an increase in performance," Johnson said. "We saw it last year. And we're hoping that those marginal gains continue to add up for him and that he gets off on the right foot and has the kind of year that we need him to have."

One key to last season, say Johnson and others in the organization, was the fact Greene returned to the mound at the end of a lost season after some elbow inflammation in August.

“That was maybe the most important thing of his season from a standpoint of showing himself and showing his teammate that he wanted to come back, he wanted to get back in the mix, that he wanted to help the team,” Johnson said.

“I thought it served a good message to his teammates that you can count on me. And that he’s a really important piece of being a good team.”

Greene talked even last year about the important of that message.

And he’s picking up that message right where he left off last year. Just ask Gibaut.

Now he’s got six more months to pitch. To grow. To lead one of the better rotations in the league.

All of which might just come down to being there. Literally.

What if one of the most dynamic pitchers in the game goes from a career-high 26 starts to 30 or 32 this year?

Could the next level for Greene be as simple as that.

“For sure,” he said. “You don’t try to complicate it too much. I’ve obviously set goals for myself this year, but getting too wrapped up in chasing them and getting into that, you can self-sabotage in a way.

“I’m just trying to stay level headed and approach my day-to-day work with the consistency that I can.”

Francona, Suter already have a special bond

Gordon Wittenmyer
Cincinnati Enquirer
USA TODAY NETWORK

The first time Terry Francona met Brent Suter was last November at the Joe Nuxhall Miracle Ball in Fairfield.

“I didn’t realize he was part of the entertainment,” the first-year Cincinnati Reds manager said.

Suter, the Reds bullpen lefty by way of Moeller High and Harvard, has made almost as much of a name for himself in the clubhouse with impersonations as he has on the mound with a career 3.45 ERA.

So when Francona watched Suter rip through his impressive playlist, including that spot-on Harry Caray, the first response was immediate.

“About 10 minutes into it I’m (freaking) on the floor,” Francona said.

The second response took another second or two to sink in.

“Then I’m thinking to myself, ‘Why are you laughing? Because in about another week, he’s going to be doing you,’” Francona said.

It wasn’t much longer than that.

Even quicker was building a “great” relationship with the manager through constant visits to Francona’s office in spring training, Suter said.

“I’m in there all the time,” Suter said. “Just to keep getting knowledge from him, getting stories from him. Just the clarity with which he sees things and spreads wisdom in his speeches — and he’s so genuine with his excitement and his passion for us and for us getting as good as we can get.

Reds manager Terry Francona got his first taste of reliever Brent Suter’s impersonations at an offseason function and found himself laughing hysterically. “Then I’m thinking to myself, ‘Why are you laughing? Because in about another week, he’s going to be doing you,’ ” Francona said. SAM GREENE/THE ENQUIRER

As the Reds open the season, Suter’s budding relationship with Francona underscores one of the super powers of the new manager, the kind of relationship-building powers that players past and present talk about.

“Definitely a culture changer,” former Red Sox MVP Dustin Pedroia said. “He treats you with respect. He understands what you’re going through. He’s done it as a player, as a coach, a manager. Every part of the game. So he gets what the everyday player is going through, or a pitcher. You appreciate that as a player.”

Said Suter: “He brings people together.”

It’s one big similarity between the manager and Suter, who made sure the two of them got to know each other well.

“I might be the exception to the rule,” Suter said of being a pitcher who spends so much time in the manager’s office — which he also did with previous managers David Bell, Bud Black and Craig Counsell.

“He came in like 18 (freaking) times,” Francona said.

Suter: “I’ve always tried to go into a manager’s office and just pick their brains and grow as a person from that.”

And?

“They’re great leaders of men,” Suter said. “They can see the game clearly. Great motivators.”

And?

Come on. We all know the other (real?) reason.

The mannerisms? The inflection?

“That’s part of it, too, for sure. Especially early,” Suter said.

“I was definitely trying to match pitch.”

Just ask Francona.

“When we had the Reds Got Talent thing,” Francona said of the annual spring competition among players and coaches, “he came out one day as (third base coach) J.R. House, one day as me, and I actually had to take my glasses off because I was laughing so hard. I laughed so hard my (freaking) side hurt.

It wasn’t enough to get Suter the big win in the competition. This year’s trophy was shared in a three-way top finish by top prospect Chase Burns, assistant hitting coach Will Remillard and catcher Michael Trautwein.

But Suter definitely won over one guy in the audience.

“I’m (freaking) telling you, I’m going to adopt him,” Francona said. “He’s got more good energy than anybody I’ve ever seen. It’s unbelievable. And it’s legit.”

An analytical look at Cincinnati vs. College Basketball Crown teams

Scott Springer
Cincinnati Enquirer | USA TODAY NETWORK

College Basketball Crown fever may not yet have taken hold, but here are some basketball numbers to kick around while you’re waiting for the University of Cincinnati Bearcats to play again, against DePaul in the Crown, or watching teams in March Madness that UC played this season.● The Big 12 sent seven teams to the NCAA tournament and it probably should have been eight given West Virginia’s six Quadrant 1 wins which was more than 14 NCAA tourney teams who even had Quad 1 wins. Some, as we will show had none. As a reminder, a Quad 1 win is a home victory against a team ranked 1-30, a neutral game vs. a 1-50 team or a road victory vs. a 1-75 team.

Where does Cincinnati Bearcats basketball stand among Crown opponents?

Boise State has the best NCAA.NET at No. 44 and the most wins with 23. Nebraska has the most Quad 1 wins with five. Coach Wes Miller and the UC Bearcats have the second-best NET at No. 50 (as of Tuesday). The Big 12 will send five teams to Las Vegas, the Big East four, the Big Ten two, the West Coast Conference two, the America Athletic Conference one, the Atlantic 10 one and Mountain West one. Games don’t begin until after the NCAA Elite Eight which will wrap up Sunday, March 30. The following day the College Basketball Crown begins on Monday, March 31 and the Bearcats don’t square off with DePaul until the next day, April 1 at 3 p.m. (Eastern) from the MGM Grand Garden Arena. UC’s Bearcats have four more wins than the Blue Demons, three more Quad 1 wins to go along with their NET rating which may have earned them an NCAA bid with a few more wins down the stretch. Those seeking ‘one Crowning moment’ Utah – The Utes finished the season 16-16 (8-12 Big 12) with a No. 73 NET and were 2-12 in Quad 1 games. They split with UC. Butler – The Bulldogs were 14-19 (6-14 Big East) with a No. 83 NET and 1-11 Quad 1 mark. George Washington – The Revolutionaries (formerly Colonials) were 20-12 (9-9 A-10) with a 124 NET and 0-1 Quad 1 mark. Boise State –The Broncos were 22-10 (14-6 Mountain West) with a tourney best NET of 44 and 3-6 Quad 1 record. Nebraska – The Cornhuskers were 17-14 (7-13 Big Ten) with a No. 59 NET and a 5-10 record in Quad 1 games. Arizona State – The Sun Devils were 13-19 (4-16 Big 12). UC won its lone meeting vs. Bobby Hurley’s team which was No. 74 in the NET and 4-14 in Quad 1 games. Georgetown –The Hoyas finished 17-15 (8-12 Big East) with a NET of 88 and 1-8 record in Quad 1 games. Washington State – The Cougars were 19-14 (8-10 WCC) with a No. 112 NET rating and a 1-7 mark against Quad 1 opponents.

DePaul – The Blue Demns were 14-19 (4-16) with a No. 119 NET rating and were 0-11 against Quad 1 teams.

Oregon State – The Beavers finished 20-12 (10-8 WCC) with a No. 85 NET and a 1-7 record vs. Quad 1 teams.

UCF – Central Florida’s Knights were 17-16 (7-13 Big 12) and lost their only matchup with UC. UCF is No. 71 in the NET and 3-11 in Quad 1 games.

Colorado –The Buffaloes finished 14-20 (3-17 Big 12) and lost their only game in Boulder vs. UC. Colorado is No. 86 in the NET and 2-15 in Quad 1 games.

Villanova –The Wildcats finished 19-14 (11-9 Big East) and handed UC its only non-conference loss of the season in December. Villanova is No. 55 in the NET and was 2-7 in Quad 1 games.

Tulane – The Green Wave was 19-14 (12-6 AAC). The former conference mates of the Bearcats had a NET of 145 and were 0-3 in Quad 1 games.

USC –The Trojans finished 16-17 (7-13 Big Ten) with a NET of 70 and a Quad 1 mark of 3-13.

Cincinnati Bearcats compared to other conferences

UC’s 50 NCAA. NET wasn’t good enough to make the field of 68, but here are some other comparisons with other leagues that conclude, mathematically, they weren’t terrible.

Disappointing would probably be the more appropriate word.

ACC – UC had a better NET rating than Pitt, Wake Forest, Stanford, Florida State, Notre Dame, Georgia Tech, California, North Carolina State, Syracuse, Virginia Tech, Boston College and the Miami Hurricanes who ranked anywhere from 61-225.

Atlantic 10 – Only VCU had a better ranking at No. 37. Dayton was next closest at No. 67.

Big 12 – The Bearcats finished with a better NET than West Virginia, UCF, Utah, Arizona State, Kansas State, TCU, Colorado and Oklahoma State who fell in anywhere from 51-96.

Big East – St. John’s, Marquette, Connecticut, Creighton and Xavier had better NET numbers, the rest fell behind UC anywhere from 55-211.

Big Ten – Nebraska, Iowa, Penn State, USC, Rutgers, Minnesota and Washington all fell behind the Bearcats finishing 59-117.

Conference USA –Top team Liberty was at No. 60, 10 slots below UC.

Mid-American Conference – Top team Akron was at 91. The runner-up Miami RedHawks were No. 147.

Miami Valley Conference – NCAA team Drake is at No. 56, six below UC.

SEC – It was clearly the better conference this season but South Carolina (87) and LSU (89) were below UC.

The American (AAC) – For those liking the old days, league champ Memphis was one better than UC at No. 49. The rest of the league finished 65-271.

Western Athletic Conference – NCAA team Grand Canyon has the best NET at 92.

West Coast Conference – Only Gonzaga and St. Mary’s had better numbers than UC, the rest of the league fell between 57-324.

Here are teams with inferior numbers to UC’s Bearcats that made NCAA’s bracket

Note that all these teams with the exception of San Diego State made the field by winning the automatic bid in their conferences.

Saint Francis (PA) – 16-18, 297 NET, no Quad 1 wins (lost to Alabama State Tuesday)

SIU-Edwardsville – 19-11, 216 NET, no Quad 1 wins

Norfolk State – 21-10, 182 NET, no Quad 1 wins

Omaha – 20-12, 160 NET, no Quad 1 wins

Bryant – 21-11, 141 NET, no Quad 1 wins

Robert Morris – 25-8, 139 NET, no Quad 1 wins

Wofford – 17-15, 131 NET, no Quad 1 wins

UNC-Wilmington – 25-7, 102 NET, no Quad 1 wins

Troy – 21-10, 99 NET, no Quad 1 wins

Grand Canyon – 25-7, 92 NET, no Quad 1 wins

Akron – 26-6, 91 NET, no Quad 1 wins

Lipscomb – 23-9, 84 NET, no Quad 1 wins

High Point – 27-5, 82 NET, no Quad 1 wins (none played)

Yale –21-7, 72 NET, no Quad 1 wins

Liberty –25-6, 60 NET, no Quad 1 wins (none played)

McNeese – 25-6, 58 NET, no Quad 1 wins

Drake – 28-3, 56 NET, two Quad 1 wins

San Diego State – 20-9, 52 NET, three Quad 1 wins (lost Tuesday vs. North Carolina)

Were Cincinnati Bearcats undeserving of NCAA bid?

Under the current system, when 31 spots are taken by automatic bids, many from inferior conferences, 37 at-large bids are left.

Fair and square, UC didn’t qualify when the door and welcome mat were laid out for them.

The Big 12’s Brett Yormark has advocated an expansion to 76 teams, which would have added West Virginia this year, but probably not UC as ESPN’s Joe Lunardi moved them beyond “next four out” in his final prognostications. Like it or not, the College Basketball Crown has the potential to replace the NIT with it’s partnership with three of the Power Four conferences and Fox Sports and the possibility of reward money.

As historical as Butler’s Hinkle Fieldhouse is from “Hoosiers”, some feel the NIT has lost its luster by no longer finishing at Madison Square Garden.

The allure of Las Vegas awaits for the Crown participants.

New arena proponents need to show us the money

If Jay Kincaid’s objective was to get people talking about a new arena, he can cross that off his to-do list.

Kincaid, a political consultant who served as former Mayor John Cranley’s campaign manager, made headlines this month when he launched the Hamilton County Growth Alliance. The name suggests a broad mission, but Kincaid’s focus at the moment is singular: fund the construction of a new arena to replace the aging Heritage Bank Center by tapping into the county’s half-cent sales tax for stadiums. You know, the tax increase passed by voters in 1996 to pay for the construction and ongoing maintenance of Great American Ball Park and Paycor Stadium.

“We believe that building a state-of-the-art arena must be part of the county’s long-term economic vision,” reads the Alliance’s mission statement.

Not that it matters, but I agree that a modern arena is the missing link in our region’s quest to compete with peer cities for major concert tours and annual sporting events, such as the NCAA basketball tournament. (We see you, Indianapolis.)

What concerns me as someone who makes a living fighting for your right to be informed is the Hamilton County Growth Alliance’s lack of transparency. Who is the “we” in their mission statement? Who’s funding the organization? Is Kincaid working on behalf of a group of insiders who stand to benefit financially if a new arena is built? In an effort to follow the money, Enquirer

Cincinnati can balance budget without punishing taxpayers

Your Turn
Mark Jeffreys
Guest columnist

With rising costs and increased demands for more efficient services, the city of Cincinnati has a projected $27 million budget deficit in the Fiscal Year 2027, a deficit that will grow north of $40 million per year absent any major change. While the “DOGE bros” take a chainsaw to federal spending, in Cincinnati we have an opportunity to showcase a smarter way to make government work better for our residents based on shared values.

The Cincinnati Futures Commission had multiple ideas, some of which are being vetted more fully. There are several other ideas we should pursue that fall under three major themes.

First, stop irresponsible behavior pushing costs onto the government.

- Stop vacant property owners from pushing $8.5 million in cost per year on to taxpayers. With the recently passed vacant building registry, we will reduce much of this expense.

- Charge institutions who call fire-fighters for non-emergency and non-health lift assistance services. It’s not right that these costs are thrown onto taxpayers, which is why other cities such as Chicago and Indianapolis now charge “lift fees” to recoup the millions in cost to taxpayers.

- “You break it, you pay for it.” It’s not right that reckless drivers destroy public property and the cost is borne by taxpayers. In other cities such as Columbus and Kansas City, they charge these drivers for the cost of fixing that damage. It’s time we recoup some of that cost.

Second, stop doing other people’s jobs, or at least get reimbursed for it. If State of Ohio agencies are providing services to rural and suburban jurisdictions, then they should provide the same to us.

- Have the Ohio Highway Patrol do speeding enforcement and crash responses/investigations on our interstates as they do in other parts of the state so our officers can be put back in our neighborhoods, or have OHP reimburse Cincinnati the millions of dollars we are spending doing the job that OHP is doing on interstates in other jurisdictions.

- Get reimbursement from the Ohio Department of Transportation for snow removal on the 20-30 miles of state routes that run through the city of Cincinnati. With ODOT treating and clearing snow on state routes that run through rural and suburban communities, there’s no reason our taxpayers should be stuck with the cost of doing ODOT’s job on state routes that run through our city.

Third, combine services for greater efficiencies. The Futures Commission recommended a few ideas on parks and recreation, but we should take it further.

- Cincinnati Parks should manage the 654 acres of green space under the Cincinnati Recreation Commission instead of having two sets of people cut adjacent sets of grass. This lets both organizations focus on what they do well: managing green space (Parks) and great programming (CRC), and it saves $25 million over 10 years.

- Ask Great Parks of Hamilton County to manage more Cincinnati Parks beyond the two parks that they manage today, especially since Cincinnati

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Democrats need to get a life and let Trump do his job

Thank you, New York Sen. Chuck Schumer, for having the courage to suggest that the budget bill be passed to keep the government open. The Democrats were always for electric vehicles and women. What happened?

Enter President Donald Trump, Vice President JD Vance and Elon Musk, who are trying to save the American taxpayers some money. What is wrong with that? It is amazing how much hatred these so-called adults in the Democratic Party have for these men.

Now, they are torching Tesla dealerships, storming Trump Tower and voting to have men play in women’s sports. Who is paying for the look-alike signs, the shirts and the people who are attending these rallies? Don’t they have jobs?

Get a life. Trump was elected. Let him do his job. If you don’t like him, in four years, you can vote the Trump administration out of office.

Please keep up your fight, President Trump, to make America great again. God bless you, and God bless America.

Being a ‘good businessman’ can’t qualify Trump to be president

Those who voted for President Donald Trump cite that because he is a good businessman, it qualifies him to do the job of the president. This is debatable, but the real question is, what about being a “good businessman” qualifies you to be the president? Is the government a business? I think not.

A government can be defined as a body or entity invested with power to manage a political unit, organization or, more often, a state. Government, from my vantage point, is a body of individuals whose very mission is to serve, protect and help guide the lives, rights and freedoms of the constituents that the government serves.

Also, a good business has, or should have, many objectives, not just increasing wealth. A good business looks to be sustainable to last over time. A good business sees its workforce as an asset. A good business recognizes customers as the reason it exists and, therefore, values them.

The old saying, “The customer is always right,” certainly lacks nuance, but at its core, it is to say that your satisfaction and well-being are important. It would seem the Trump administration has no such aim.

Barbara Druffel, College Hill

President Trump has done plenty of good in his first two months

In Kevin Aldridge’s editorial of Feb. 16 titled, “Your voice matters – conservatives included,” he encouraged conservatives to submit letters to The Enquirer. He implied that The Enquirer receives few letters from conservatives, saying, “We can’t publish what we don’t receive.”

Here are a few positive comments I have to say in support of President Donald Trump, his policies and the Republicans in Congress who have quickly taken action on important issues since the Trump administration assumed the presidency and control of Congress just two short months ago.

Efforts have been made to reduce waste, fraud and abuse of taxpayer dollars. The border is being made more secure and actions are being taken to remove individuals who have entered the U.S. illegally. Those who have been convicted of criminal activities and the killing of American citizens are being prosecuted. Trump has taken actions to support negotiations in an attempt to save lives and end the war between Ukraine and Russia, where we have been pouring taxpayer dollars into Ukraine for years now. Trump is taking steps to make it more attractive for businesses to remain in America, come to America, create more jobs in America and make “Made in America” a proud slogan again.

Of course, liberals will be quick to point out the current, ugly tariff war that has begun between our country and others and how it is influencing our stock market. Trump is simply trying to stop countries from taking advantage of us as they have been for years. I support the idea of matching the tariffs imposed by foreign countries equally tariff for tariff.

Additionally, I have seen no letters critical of Rep. Greg Landsman for his vote against the bill H.R. 28: Protection of Women and Girls in Sports Act of 2025. The bill subsequently passed the House of Representatives. I have seen no letters critical of Landsman for his vote against the censure of Texas Rep. Al Green for his disruptive protest during Trump’s recent joint session of Congress speech. The House subsequently voted to censure Green.

Will we see any letters critical of Landsman’s March 11 vote against a bill that would keep the government funded through September? In the past, Landsman has stated how “devastating” a government shutdown could be and, in a statement dated Jan. 8, 2024, he was quoted as saying, “This is as serious of a moment as it gets. We absolutely have to prevent a dangerous government shutdown that could blow up the economy and hurt millions of workers and nearly every one of our families.”

USAID empire-building programs deserve to be shut down

With all the letters to the editor supporting USAID, I thought it might be useful to have a report of first-hand experience with that agency.

During my years as a consultant in the food industry, I was involved in four USAID projects: Senegal, Yemen, Burkina Faso and Liberia. The Yemen and Burkina Faso projects were simply inquiries to determine if the ideas coming out of Washington, D.C., were viable.

They were not. The programs were scrapped, and the expenses were minimal.

The Senegal and Liberia projects involved programs already underway with sunk expenses (buildings, contracted labor, etc.) of over $1 million. Neither of them, in the planning or early activity, took cognizance of the cultural and economic realities of the countries. Both are failures.

The original intent of USAID was to deliver nonperishable food (corn, wheat, soybeans, etc.) to countries facing malnutrition. The USAID’s actions are commendable when they stick to that mission. The extraneous, empire-building programs deserve to be totally shut down.

A scalpel (not a meat ax) would cut away the bad segments and preserve the useful ones. One can only hope.

Clyde Stauffer, Finneytown

A new arena without a main tenant is a billion-dollar gamble

I read Cincinnati City Councilman Seth Walsh’s op-ed on the urgent need for an expanded arena, and I support the urgency and the economic benefits. That being said, he missed an opportunity as an elected official to clarify where it should be and how the cost should be justified, including who will be the host team that will generate the revenue to build the arena.

Simply hosting March Madness a couple of times a decade, or a similar high-profile event in between, like a national convention for the President of the United States, along with the Cincinnati Cyclones, will not be sufficient. We need to start exploring the host because a plan of “build it and they will come” would be foolish.

This is a billion-dollar-plus question. Given the recently built Intuit Dome Arena in Los Angeles, which hosts the NBA’s L.A. Clippers, cost $2 billion, we need to understand a competitive arena will be at least a billion dollars.

If we want to move forward with this new arena, we first need to find a host team or a consistent draw that will fill the seats. The location is also key. The Banks is at risk of being a complete failure as a “neighborhood” if we don’t maintain a year-round draw of visitors who will also be customers to the local businesses at The Banks.

Before we get the proverbial cart before the horse, we need to have a serious discussion of what team or alternative business model will keep the lights on year-round.

Brian Frank, Mount Adams

Let’s support Trump’s efforts to rein in our bloated government

I understand that many people in this country don’t like President Donald Trump or what his administration is trying to accomplish. But this is not a pro-Trump letter, it is a pro-America letter. In the March 21 Enquirer, there was an article about how Kohl’s, Big Lots, Joanne Fabrics, Macy’s and JCPenney, among others, are closing underperforming stores.

Why? Because those companies must do so to survive. When this happens, people lose their jobs. Any outcry about that? Not a peep.

But when the Trump administration does the same thing so America can survive, you would think it’s the worst thing ever done. The above-referenced companies must answer to their shareholders, who are their owners. Well, we the people are the shareholders in America. We are deeply in debt, something those companies can’t be in and still have open doors.

Let’s support this effort to rein in the bloated, inefficient government so that our children and grandchildren may have an America to live in. It would be great if The Enquirer would report the positives of what DOGE and the Trump administration are doing for the country, as well as the concerns.

James Rueger, Green Township

Senate Bill 1 hurts universities and Gov. DeWine shouldn’t sign it

I am offering a direct plea to Ohio Gov. Mike DeWine regarding his signature on Senate Bill 1, an overhaul of the state’s public universities and colleges. It is my hope he will refuse to sign this bill and stand according to his principles as he did when he led us through the COVID-19 pandemic.

I have several questions. The first of which is, as a fiscal conservative, how much will an academic surveillance state cost? As a former prosecutor, how could DeWine sign a bill with language so vague it is guaranteed to be up to the courts to litigate its meaning? How much will it cost the taxpayers, the court system and teachers and students? The lost research? The lost opportunities for expansion and growth?

Can he see what is happening to our great nation and sign his name to it? As part of Trump’s DEI purge, the Department of Defense was set to remove content from its website and social media related to the historic World War II airplane the Enola Gay, which dropped an atomic bomb on Hiroshima, because it included the word “gay.” Likewise, an article honoring the military legacy of baseball legend Jackie Robinson also briefly disappeared before being reinstated.

What’s next, and how will DeWine be remembered?

Kathleen Jones, Westwood

I’m concerned about the future of women and minorities in America

With the Trump administration’s crackdown on all DEI initiatives, resulting in schools like Ohio University being forced to shut down its Celebrate Women 2025 event, should I be telling my wife that her Mother’s Day celebration is now canceled? It makes me very concerned about the outlook on the future of women and minorities in our society.

James Valentine, Amberley Village

Trump and Musk are dismantling democracy while defying courts

Step by step, President Donald Trump and Elon Musk are dismantling our democracy. They have eliminated agencies, which only Congress can establish or dissolve, and fired thousands of their employees without cause and congressional approval. They have even invaded a private nonprofit organization (the U.S. Institute of Peace) and removed its leader. They have openly defied court orders to stop.

Now, Musk and Trump are planning to pack the Federal Election Commission with their cronies so that they can decide how (or if) elections can be held. By 2026, our elections – if we have them at all – will be powerless, rubber-stamp “show” elections like those in Russia for President Vladimir Putin, whom Trump admires and wants to imitate.

Of course, neither Ohio Sen. Bernie Moreno nor Sen. Jon Husted have raised the slightest objection to any of this.

We should be asking DOGE, ‘Where is fraud, corruption and abuse?’

Your Turn
Randy Overbeck
Guest columnist

We are only a few weeks into Elon Musk and DOGE's attack on the federal government workforce in the name of "rooting out fraud, corruption and abuse," and Americans are still waiting for the big reveal. President Donald Trump has claimed they've found "billions in fraud and corruption" but no one on the DOGE team has shared publicly any real fraud or corruption.

Their sledgehammer approach has sliced the jobs of thousands of individuals who eschewed offers from the private sector to serve the country as scientists, researchers, computer analysts, soldiers and CPAs, many of those who were probationary employees. As a result, the nuclear stockpile was put at risk – some who were responsible for safeguarding these weapons were dismissed.

This year, Americans will have even more problems getting straight answers from the IRS, and the agency will be able to conduct fewer audits – which will actually cost the government more than the layoffs will save. Farmers who need expert help dealing with challenges like the bird flu and invasive species will have more trouble finding an agriculture expert.

Veterans, especially the soldiers suffering from exposure to burn pits, will find longer wait lines and fewer doctors and nurses to help, as 1,200 jobs have been cut at the VA. Americans traveling to national parks this year will find longer lines and wait times, parks and forests that are not cleaned, and even some locations shuttered, as more than 1,000 employees of the National Park Service have been eliminated.

These are just a few examples of the knife-cutting through the federal workforce.

The massive number of layoffs will no doubt save the federal government significant dollars, although at the expense of services and support for the public. But there is no indication that any of these large swaths of layoffs have anything to do with fraud, corruption and abuse.

Demonstrators gather outside of the Office of Personnel Management in Washington, D.C., on Feb. 7 to protest federal layoffs and demand the termination of Elon Musk from the Department of Government Efficiency, or DOGE.

BRYAN DOZIER, MIDDLE EAST IMAGES/AFP VIA GETTY

Even the closing of USAID and the highly touted cuts to its programs had nothing to do with “fraud, corruption and abuse.” Although we can argue the merit of programs like those promoting an inclusive workforce in a country not friendly with the U.S. – and it’s fair to raise questions about this expenditure and whether it’s worth pursuing – it is false to try to categorize it as “fraud, corruption and abuse.” A new administration certainly has the right to fund issues it considers important, but another administration's priorities do not make them corrupt or fraudulent.

The sad fact is there is definitely “fraud, corruption and abuse” in federal expenditures. Representatives and senators on both sides of the aisle have lists of such abuse of public funds in every corner of the government, from the Defense Department to the Education Department to Health and Human Services. The massive layoffs will impact all parts of the country, as 80% of all dismissed employees live outside Washington, D.C., and affect businesses that these employees support, from daycare centers to restaurants to grocery stores. But the layoffs won’t put a dent in the real “fraud, corruption and abuse” at the federal level.

As thousands upon thousands of federal employees have had to pull up roots, go on unemployment, and search for some way to support their children and partners, every dismissed employee – and everyone else – should be asking, “Where is the fraud, corruption and abuse?” And why are those who actually control the federal purse strings, our representatives and senators, not asking this question?

Ohio’s new academic autonomy can be used to benefit students

Your Turn
Philip Derrow
Guest columnist

Gov. Mike DeWine recently traveled to Washington to witness the signing of President Donald Trump’s executive order to return education policymaking to the states. Several weeks earlier, Vivek Ramaswamy made education one of his most important priorities when he announced his bid to replace term-limited DeWine as our next governor.

While it’s good to see a greater focus on centering education locally, questions remain about how Ohio’s new-found academic autonomy will benefit students.

No one should mourn the planned demise of the federal Department of Education.

Established by Congress in 1979, ostensibly to better manage federal education-related activities, the U.S. lags most of our peer nations in student academic outcomes. There is hardly a better example than this of a failed bureaucracy and misuse of trillions of taxpayer dollars.

To be sure, there are important programs and financial support from the Education Department to help schools serve students with special needs and to assure compliance with federal non-discrimination laws. The executive order makes it clear those programs will continue.

Ramaswamy’s focus is on K-12 education, with special emphasis on attracting the best teachers to Ohio by implementing individual merit pay policies. Common in the private sector, these compensation plans pay individual employees more or less based on their achievements. While individual merit pay sounds good, it’s questionable whether it has actual merit in a public school environment.

I was first elected to my local school board, in part, because of my private sector business experience and campaign promise to help resolve our district’s financial difficulties and raise academic achievement. Like Ramaswamy, I thought individual merit pay for teachers would be part of the solution. It wasn’t.

Ayaan Moledina, 15, a sophomore at St. Stephen’s Episcopal School in Austin, Texas, speaks against President Trump’s attempts to dismantle the Department of Education at the Texas Capitol on March 24. JAY JANNER/AMERICAN-STATESMAN

Individual merit pay doesn’t work. District-wide merit pay does.

As I prepared for our board’s contract offer and negotiations with our teacher’s union, I did a deep dive into the evidence for individual teacher merit pay policies. The concept has been a topic of debate for decades so I was confident of finding a successful public school model we could adapt for our district. I was wrong. There weren’t any.

Not only weren’t there any in Ohio or elsewhere in the U.S., there weren’t any in other developed nations either. I loved the idea of our district being the first success story, but it was more important to understand why it hadn’t worked elsewhere. The most common theme was that K-12 teachers see themselves as part of a team.

The star high school math teacher has the benefit of working with students who were helped by their kindergarten, elementary and middle school teachers. Paying that high school math teacher more is antithetical to such a culture and there was no evidence to support breaking it.

Working from that knowledge, we established a merit pay system based on the entire district’s achievement of objective academic goals. If we hit our target, everyone earned a bonus. If we missed, no one did. Not just teachers but every employee of the district, including bus drivers, custodians, cafeteria workers, administrators, the superintendent and even board members had money at risk.

It wasn’t much – about 2% of pay for most – but it mattered because everyone was on the same team.

It worked. In our first three years with the new strategy, we increased academic achievement from 63rd to 17th in Ohio out of 608 districts and spent less per student doing so.

But district-wide merit pay was only a small part of the success. We started the process by replacing the verbose and meaningless mission and vision statements with a simple and concise statement of purpose “to create a culture of accountability that achieves the best academic and developmental outcomes for each student.” We defined each keyword so there would be no ambiguity about what we meant.

We hired a superintendent with the skills and commitment to our purpose and then the whole team went to work to make it happen.

Of course, there’s more to this story, but the key elements work in almost every organization: clarity of purpose, rejecting distractions, objective goals and measurements, alignment of interests and rewards only for successful outcomes.

That’s where Ohio’s next governor should focus our new educational autonomy.

Free enterprise essential for well-being, prosperity of Kentuckians

Your Turn
Ashli Watts
Guest columnist

To borrow the words of Suzanne Clark, CEO of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, “All business is local.” Policies created at every level, from the federal level to the state and local levels, have ripple effects that directly impact not only national growth but the success of local businesses. We must recognize how policies across all levels intersect and impact Kentuckians. When these policies support free enterprise, everyone benefits.

Kentucky contributes significantly to the national economy. In 2024, our GDP reached $234.5 billion, with local businesses doing the heavy lifting. If we want sustained economic growth across the nation, we must ensure that businesses in states like ours can thrive.

Perhaps even more important to Kentuckians than national economic growth is what our businesses mean to us. Kentucky is home to over 380,000 small businesses and a civilian labor force of more than 2 million workers. Free enterprise is not a political point of view for us – it is essential to the well-being and prosperity of our families and neighbors.

The past four years have brought challenges ranging from inflationary pressures to supply chain disruptions. Although Kentucky businesses have remained resilient, we still face critical issues that need to be addressed. Challenges at the federal level, such as regulatory policies that limit business growth and broad tariffs impacting trade, have created real concerns.

Notably in 2023, Kentucky's $9 billion bourbon and distilled spirits industry contributed over $357 million in tax revenue to local and state governments. Kentucky produces 95% of the world's bourbon and ranks second among U.S. states for distilled spirits exports. Additionally, our state's spirits industry sustains more than 23,000 jobs and generates year-round tourism, with more than 2.55 million experiences provided to Kentucky Bourbon Trail visitors in 2023.

“Buy Canadian Instead” signs sit on empty shelves after the top five U.S. liquor brands were removed in a Vancouver, British Columbia, store as a response to President Donald Trump’s 25% tariffs on Canadian goods on Feb. 2. CHRIS HELGREN

The industry's extensive supply chain within Kentucky is a showcase of small businesses. It includes logging, stave mills, cooperages, still manufacturing, logistics and bottling, label and box manufacturing, along with a full array of professional services such as architectural, engineering, legal, and accounting. As the industry grew over the past 15 years, so did the supply chain. Our distillers now buy 74% of their corn from Kentucky farmers, up from 40% in 2014. The total of corn purchases rose to record levels in lockstep with the number of new barrels filled and total barrels aging in the state.

As the industry grew, Kentucky brought its distilling success – supported and propelled by local businesses – to the world. Between 2009 and 2019, Kentucky's whiskey exports – primarily bourbon – rocketed from $151 million to nearly $489 million, according to the Kentucky Cabinet for Economic Development. Similarly, the state's total distilled spirits exports shot from $187 million in 2009 to nearly $568 million in 2019.

Then, an unrelated trade dispute put Kentucky bourbon in the crosshairs. The European Union's 25% retaliatory tariffs dealt a major blow to the industry's success. Based on its trajectory from 2019, Kentucky's spirits industry lost $587 million in export business across the next four years. With the EU and U.K.'s retaliatory tariffs temporarily suspended, exports are climbing back but haven't yet reached 2018 levels, let alone their 2019 high point.

We now find ourselves in a new era of trade disputes and tariffs. These market-disrupting decisions send waves down the industry's almost entirely on-shore supply chain. Lost sales mean production scalebacks at distilleries, fewer barrel, bottle, and grain orders, and less revenue for investment production and visitor amenities.

Kentucky's signature bourbon and spirits industry is just one example of how international and federal policies trickle down to local communities.

Ultimately, policies that promote free enterprise principles will benefit every level of society – from the individual entrepreneur to the national economy. Free enterprise protects industries like Kentucky's bourbon industry that rely on trade and helps steer our country's America First attitude and pursuit of economic growth.

I urge policymakers, at both the state and federal levels, to recognize the importance of policies that protect and grow businesses. I am optimistic about the future for business, but it is essential that we act now to strategically acknowledge and address the trickle-down effect that policies have on businesses – local or federal, large or small.

This is not just about Kentucky; it's about ensuring that free enterprise continues to drive America's growth, innovation and prosperity.

Your Turn
Katie Niven
Guest columnist

Gov. Mike DeWine has proposed creating new taxes on sports gambling that would help subsidize new facilities and renovations for the Cincinnati Bengals, Cleveland Browns and other Ohio professional teams. The governor plans to spend hundreds of millions of dollars to help build and renovate evermore expensive stadiums for millionaire players who score points for billionaire owners.

While a giveaway to some of the richest teams in sports seems wasteful, there is also a second part of the governor’s sports gambling tax proposal that would create a “sports education fund.” This is desperately needed.

There is a crisis in scholastic sports funding in Ohio, and it keeps getting worse. For years, districts across the state have been charging students $100, $200 and $300 per child, per sport, to play high school basketball, softball, football and the rest. Warren County’s Springboro High School charges a $260 fee. In Medina County, Medina High School charges $330. Now, the Marysville school district in Union County has raised the financial barrier even higher, charging students a $575 fee to play.

Detention is still free. But if you want to spend your after-school time productively with a team and a coach, working together, learning together, swinging a bat or catching a ball, that’ll be $575. And it will not stop there. Districts, including Marysville, have thrown around proposals to charge students as much as $800 per sport. We know that scholastic sports help strengthen student outcomes. Research shows that playing high school sports raises student attendance rates and increases the likelihood they will successfully earn a degree.

That is why the governor should take his proposed sports education fund and use it to eliminate scholastic sports participation fees. For less than half of what the governor’s new tax on sports gambling would produce, Ohio could replace all pay-to-play fees and help support scholastic athletic budgets in every district in the state.

By acknowledging that sports matter to education, the governor has taken a big step forward. But simply funding a commission on sports with vague goals is not enough. Former Ohio State football coach and now Lt. Gov. Jim Tressel could make this issue his own. He could stand up for student athletes and declare that every kid has a right to play. How much richer is Tressel’s life – in every way – because he had a chance to play a sport?

What would this world have lost if Jesse Owens had been blocked by participation fees from his high school’s track and field squad? Before he ran for Ohio State and won four Olympic gold medals in Berlin in 1936, Owens was born to a sharecropping family and later lived in extreme poverty growing up in Ohio. Owens set international records competing in high school track meets – but he wouldn’t have if he needed to come up with $575 to be on the team.

How many boys and girls are missing out on scholastic sports in Ohio today because we are making them pay to play? Before funding stadium subsidies for private sports businesses that make massive profits, DeWine and Tressel should wipe out the participation fees in every high school in Ohio. Because when we charge kids to play, we all lose.

Federal funding cuts would harm local families, nonprofits

Your Turn
Moira Weir
Guest columnist

When the cost of heating her apartment became too much to manage, a 54-year-old Navy veteran in Mount Auburn called United Way 211, our 24-hour helpline. Overwhelmed and unsure where to turn, she talked to a 211 coordinator who connected her to a local relief program.

“It was amazing what happened,” she said.

We get calls like this every day – tens of thousands of requests for assistance a year from individuals and families. We listen carefully and make referrals based on our database of more than 1,200 agencies and 6,000 services.

These nonprofits are critical lifelines for our community, offering extensive support and stability to families, often in partnership with the federal government. We recently polled more than 100 of them and found they collectively delivered more than 1.2 million services with federal funding last year. That’s the equivalent of providing a service to nearly one in every two people in the Greater Cincinnati region.

The challenges we face in our community are complex and interconnected. No single entity, no matter how dedicated or resourceful, can solve these issues alone – not the federal government, not local governments, nonprofits, or charitable organizations. Alongside hundreds of local nonprofits, we create a support network that can catch people before they fall through the cracks. Together, we can lift entire communities in ways that an individual organization cannot.

Nonprofits are essential to helping the federal government fulfill its obligations to citizens. Recent executive orders and administrative memos have increased the focus on federal grants and contracts. If federal funding is disrupted, two-thirds of nonprofits in our area say they would face tough decisions within six months regarding who gets services and who does not.

Federal funding accounts for more than $1 trillion in support for state and local programs. These programs provide services ranging from basic needs and housing to youth education and workforce development. Private philanthropy, however vital, is not a feasible alternative.

We were fortunate that the federal government made substantial investments to support our response to the economic challenges presented by the COVID-19 pandemic. In fact, United Way partnered with local and state governments over the last four years to administer almost $40 million in federal funding to support our recovery.

Federal funding flows to state and local operations by design. This policy approach ensures that federal resources translate to meaningful support.

Organizations nearest to communities are equipped to respond to their unique and evolving needs, making them indispensable to our community’s stability. Without this funding, many of our neighbors could lose access to critical needs and support systems that can put them on a path to a better future.

We all have a stake in the well-being of our community. The partnership between federal agencies and the nonprofit sector is critical to maximizing impact while minimizing bureaucracy. When we’re united, we strengthen systems that help our entire community thrive – now and in the future.

reporters asked Kincaid who his funders are. So far, he’s been tight-lipped. And from a legal standpoint, he has every right to keep us in the dark.

The Hamilton County Growth Alliance is a tax-exempt, nonprofit group registered as a 501(c)(4), a designation used for “social welfare organizations.” Examples of so-called “C4s” include the American Civil Liberties Union, the National Rifle Association, and a host of political organizations that use the tax status to hide their donors. You might be familiar with the term “dark money?” The 501(c)(4) designation, which does not require groups to disclose the source of their funding, fosters that lack of transparency.

Now that we’ve dispensed with that primer on Internal Revenue Service codes, we can get back to the matter at hand. Does the public have a right to know who’s supporting the Hamilton County Growth Alliance? My answer is, absolutely. So I asked Kincaid why he’s not willing to share that information. His answer? There are some who would consider dipping into the stadium tax as antagonistic toward the Reds and Bengals when the Alliance is promoting a plan that would fund all three concerns.

“Based on how some people have already responded – we’ve been called ‘bullies’ – you can see how that would have a chilling effect,” Kincaid said, referencing Hamilton County Commissioner Alicia Reece’s comments during the commission’s meeting on March 20.

Kincaid said the Alliance supports Reece’s long-held position that voters should have say on how much the county should pay for Paycor Stadium renovations – estimated at $1.2 billion – as part of a new lease agreement with the Bengals. The Alliance conducted a survey of 400 county residents and found 63% of those polled said they would prioritize replacing Heritage Bank Center over renovating Paycor Stadium and Great American Ball Park.

I have no reason to doubt the integrity of the survey, which was conducted last fall by market research firm Public Opinion Strategies. But I’m curious to know, as we all should be, who paid for it. To draw a comparison, I can find numerous studies online that tout the health benefits of drinking bourbon in moderation. Most of them happen to be published by distilleries.

The Alliance also is set to launch an advertising campaign – pegged to March Madness – to promote its vision for a new arena. Who’s paying for those ads?

If private money was being raised for a new arena, it would be a different story. But a group trying to influence how we spend tax dollars owes it to the community to be transparent, regardless of its tax status.

Show us the money.

taxpayers pay 37% of the Great Parks levy. Having Great Parks – who are our neighbors and do a great job – manage more acreage is fair and would save our taxpayers over $25 million over 10 years.

- Establish a joint city/county task force to identify shared services savings for both the city and county with a target of at least 5% reduction in costs. Unlike DOGE, we can pursue smart, methodical and targeted savings with back-office savings over the next few years and do it humanely.

Making government run more efficiently is about giving citizens confidence that we are being good stewards of their hard-earned tax dollars, but it’s also about improving the quality of life for our citizens based on shared values. These measures are a sensible and fair approach – just common sense.

Cincinnati Councilman Mark Jeffreys is chairman of the Equitable Growth and Housing Committee. He is also vice president of the Ohio Regional Council of Governments.

CYBERWAVES

wading through online streams

By Dan Rice

New this week

Power is up for grabs as the organized crime family of Conrad (Pierce Brosnan) and Maeve Harrigan (Helen Mirren) clashes with the rival Stevensons in a kill-or-be-killed battle that threatens to topple empires and ruin lives on “Mobland,” premiering Sunday, March 30, on Paramount+. Caught in the crossfire is Harry Da Souza (Tom Hardy), the street-smart “fixer” as dangerous as he is handsome, who knows too well where loyalties lie when opposing forces collide. As kingdom goes up against kingdom, the only saving grace is a bet-your-life guarantee: family above everything.

Pierce Brosnan

Premiering Sunday, March 30, on AMC+, the mystery drama “The Last Anniversary” is set on the remote, but beautiful Scribbly Gum Island, a place of many secrets. The one that made it famous - the disappearance of a young couple decades ago - might have made the island a destination for true-crime tourists, but when Sophie Honeywell (Teresa Palmer) inherits a house on the island, it’s the fresh start she’s craving. After the unwelcome reception she receives on arrival, she begins to investigate the mysteries of the island and finds herself drawn into a complex web of long-held family secrets spanning three generations of women, uncovering far more than ever expected.

Now streaming

The most original musical biopic ever made, the Oscar-nominated “Better Man,” now available on Paramount+, chronicles the meteoric rise, dramatic fall and remarkable resurgence of British pop superstar Robbie Williams, re-imagined as an anthropomorphic chimpanzee with computer-generated imagery, performed by Jonno Davies using motion capture, and voiced by both Williams and Davies. This moving and poignant story about fame, recovery, relationships and redemption also stars Steve Pemberton, Kate Mulvany, Alison Steadman and Damon Herriman.

Nicole Kidman

Michigan town of “Holland,” a wildly unpredictable thriller currently streaming on Prime Video. Nancy and her friendly colleague (Gael García Bernal) become suspicious of a secret, only to discover that nothing in their lives is what it seems.

Coming up

Premiering Friday, April 4, on Apple TV+, “Stick” is a new golf comedy series created by Jason Keller and starring and executive produced by Owen Wilson. Wilson stars as Pryce Cahill, an over-the-hill, ex-pro golfer whose career was derailed prematurely 20 years ago. After the collapse of his marriage and getting fired from his job at an Indiana sporting goods store, Pryce hedges his bets, and future, entirely on a troubled 17-year-old golf phenom named Santi (Peter Dager). The feel-good comedy co-stars Judy Greer, Marc Maron and Timothy Olyphant and features pro golfers Keegan Bradley, Wyndham Clark, Max Homa, Trevor Immelman and Collin Morikawa.

Actors-turned-authors embrace words on page beyond script

Clare Mulroy
USA TODAY

Krysten Ritter thought she had the perfect pitch: a successful lawyer returning home to a small-town scandal. A cold case disappearance. A disturbing ritual.

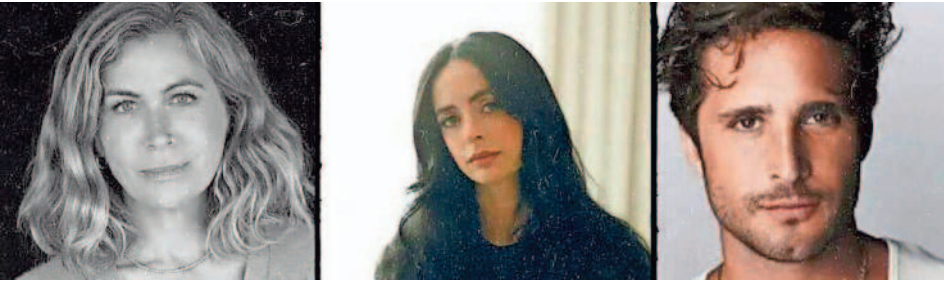

But it was a hard sell as a TV series, the “Jessica Jones” actor tells USA TODAY. Back at the drawing board, she pitched it as a novel instead. Her idea became “Bonfire,” a 2017 thriller blurred even by Gillian Flynn of “Gone Girl” literary fame. Now, Ritter has added regular novelist to her accolades. Her next novel, “Retreat,” is out now.

Actors turning to diverse entrepreneurial ventures is nothing new – between hair care, liquor brands, travel and luxury wellness campaigns, your favorite star’s career likely extends beyond the screen.

When it comes to writing books, most actors turn to memoirs. After all, it bolsters an already impressive career built on celebrity. But what about the growing number of actors including Tom Hanks, Keanu Reeves and Ed Burns who are writing fiction instead? Actors who spoke to USA TODAY said publishing novels has given them a new outlet for creativity away from the screen.

‘What took me so long?’: Longtime actors find freedom in fiction

For years, Sonya Walger – known to many as Penny from the “Lost” TV series – was scared of writing a book. She has been an avid reader for as long as she can remember. As an only child, books were her “siblings,” she tells USA TODAY. Now, her debut novel, “Lion,” about a daughter’s reflection of her large-er-than-life addict father and unconventional childhood, is out in the world. Her second book is on its way and she’s writing her third.

From left, Sonya Walger, Krysten Ritter and Diego Boneta chat with USA TODAY about how writing fiction has changed their lives.

PROVIDED BY KAYT JONES, JENNIFER MCCORD AND RICARDO RAMOS

“I’m such a snob about good literature and I just had felt like I don’t want to write a bad book,” Walger says. “I wrote screenplays ... short stories and kept journals my whole life, and I didn’t dare write a book until COVID.”

Writing screenplays didn’t scratch the same itch that writing a novel does, Walger says. With more words to spend and luxurious prose to wax, novel writing is “symphonic.” She’s particularly enjoyed describing setting with more imagination and nuance and exploring what’s left unsaid.

The biggest shift, she says, is going from days on packed sets to writing alone in her office – a beautiful writing shed in the garden she lost when her home was destroyed this year in the Los Angeles wildfires. The whole process has made her realize she’s more of an introvert than she previously thought.

“Acting requires and necessitates other people. To be a novelist is to work completely alone without anyone really caring what you’re doing or when it’s done,” she says.

“Nobody is tapping you on the shoulder being like, ‘Where’s that novel of yours?’”

Ritter, on the other hand, says writing “Retreat” with a co-writer has felt collaborative – a sort of “two heads are better than one, and sometimes three, four, five, six heads are better than one” approach, she says.

The quiet writing time has given the “Breaking Bad” star more time to spend with her son, an invaluable shift in her career.

velopment, storytelling,” Ritter says. “And being able to have a bit of a schedule where I can work from my office from home versus be on set for 17 hours – as a mom, it’s a way to do it all. And I’m not suggesting that I have that conquered, but it’s really important to me to be with my son and also have creative satisfaction.”

New ideas get a fresh perspective in the pages of a book

Ritter didn’t expect to turn into a bestselling thriller writer; for her, it was always “creativity first, medium second.” It’s advice she wants to impart to other writers and artists: If you believe in your story, be relentless in your pursuit of bringing it into the world.

“‘Bonfire’ turned out to be this totally outside-of-the-box approach on how to get something made,” Ritter says. “That’s where I fell in love with that medium and decided to continue in that avenue.”

Now, with her second book, “Retreat” (out now), she’s leaning all-in to the world of publishing. The new novel, about a beautiful con artist masquerading as a wealthy socialite, is “a little bit older, sexier” with bigger twists, she says.

Actor Diego Boneta (“Luis Miguel,” “Rock of Ages”), on the other hand, is marrying books and TV with his upcoming debut “The Undoing of Alejandro Velasco.” Amazon Publishing is releasing Boneta’s novel – described as “The Talented Mr. Ripley” meets “Match Point” – in May. At the same time, Amazon MGM Studios is adapting the novel into a series with Boneta starring as the main character.

The starting idea was to write a screenplay, and Boneta’s sister suggested he turn it into a book instead of a script.

“It was a massive undertaking,” Boneta says, laughing. “Few things give me more anxiety than a blank page.”

Boneta, a thriller reader, wanted to reach out to other writers for advice before he started. The best he heard? Don’t treat the project like it’s just another film or TV script.

The process has been vastly different, he says, but it is one he would do again. “Sometimes (in TV) you don’t even have a script, you have a pitch, you have a couple of pages. ... we’ve gotten stuff greenlit from literally a three-page document,” Boneta says. “Here, it’s really practicing the patience of no, no, no, a novel is not the same as a TV show or films.”

Fiction deepens connection with fans

Part of Boneta’s goal with writing “The Undoing” was to write about a place close to his heart. The novel is set in San Miguel de Allende, a place the Mexico City-born Boneta calls “the Florence of Mexico.” He tells USA TODAY he’s excited for his fans to get a more intimate peek into his creative mind and experience his beloved city on the page.

“We’ve seen the ‘Narcos’ stories, we’ve seen the border-crossing stories and that’s part of Mexico, but that’s not entirely what Mexico has to offer culturally,” Boneta says. “We wanted to write from a place that we were close to, that we grew up going to because it’s not just the place; it’s the culture, it’s the people, it’s the family dynamics.”

Ritter says her novels are another chance to explore the “bad girls,” the unlikely, morally questionable characters her fans know and love her for, such as Jessica Jones and Chloe in “Don’t Trust the B---- in Apartment 23.”

“My fans roll deep,” she says. “They know what to expect in my work, my oeuvre. It’s very on brand.”

Walger has appreciated a new kind of interaction with fans, one that has nothing to do with her onscreen roles. “Lion” is not a story for anyone who is looking for a tell-all from Penny of “Lost” and Walger says fans are meeting her there.

“Vulnerability begets vulnerability in others,” Walger says.

TCM, 6 a.m.
“People come. People go. Nothing ever happens,” one world-weary patron (Lewis Stone) of Berlin’s finest hotel comments in this legendary 1932 drama. But movie audiences knew (and still know) better. In what is indeed a grand showcase for the allure and style of classic filmmaking, and a production that set the stage for all “star-studded” big-screen teamings of popular actors to come, filmgoers were witnessing the glorious comings, goings and intersecting stories of a blindingly bright array of stars that was billed not entirely hyperbolically as “the greatest cast ever assembled.” Ruined aristocrat John Barrymore. Terminally ill clerk Lionel Barrymore. Ruthless tycoon Wallace Beery. Scheming stenographer Joan Crawford. And disillusioned ballerina Greta Garbo, who made film history

Shelley Shepard Gray returns with ‘Unforgotten’

Barbara McIntyre
Special to USA TODAY NETWORK - Ohio

“Unforgotten,” a combination romance/psychological drama by Loveland, Ohio, native Shelley Shepard Gray, is unusual in that it has two heroines of equal prominence, one Amish and one “English.” Set in the same world as 2024’s “Unforgiven” but not billed as part of a series, it follows cousins Bethanne Hostetler and Candace Evans. Bethanne must belong to one of the less conservative Amish sects, as she carries a cellphone and her mother has a phone in the kitchen. This is allowed because Bethanne is the survivor of an attempted assault seven years before. With the trauma she suffered, she became a near-recluse, only recently beginning to leave her room. She still experiences panic attacks and is distrustful of most men. It’s a big step for Bethanne to attend a beauty pageant at the local fairgrounds, where she cheers on her cousin Candace, who is entered in a leadup pageant to the Miss Kentucky contest. When Candace wins, she immediately starts on a promotional tour of store openings and senior centers, taking photos in her sash and high heels and obliging little girls who want to try on her crown. Each woman is on the verge of a new relationship: Bethanne has been cold to Jay for years, though his only offense is being the best friend of the man who attacked her. She realizes this is unreasonable but just can’t bring herself to overlook it. New-in-town police officer Ryan becomes Candace’s self-assigned chauffeur and bodyguard, giving as his reason that he wants to acquaint himself with the area and meet more people — “make connections.” Candace has reported a possible stalker but hasn’t been candid enough to let the police know how close this creep has come. She doesn’t want to disappoint her sponsors or jeopardize her scholarship. The story is well paced, balancing the stories of each woman with sensitivity. The best parts are the dramatic scenes, where the cousins must work together to foil the stalker, and the character of Jay, a thoughtful man with integrity. “Unforgotten” (304 pages, softcover) costs $17.99 from Revell. Shelley Shepard Gray has written novels in more than 20 series, most set among Amish communities, and about as many standalone novels. Bethanne was a minor character in “Unforgiven,” the next book is titled “Unshaken” and appears to be set in the same town as “Unforgotten,” but no release date is given. Barbara McIntyre tweets at @BarbaraMcI.

PROVIDED BY REVELL

ASK CAROLYN | CAROLYN HAX

Hurt by MIL’s indifference toward husband, his family

Dear Carolyn: My elderly mother-in-law has always favored her daughter, granddaughter and great-grandkids. She mostly ignored my daughter from a previous marriage and even our son – her only son’s son. It has been very depressing to listen to her go on and on about her sister’s grandkids, on the phone or when we used to visit, usually never asking about our kids or grandkids. We haven’t visited her often during the past years, and now she has quit calling my husband and he has quit calling her – nothing planned, just happened. I called my husband’s sister a few months ago to tell her that her brother, my husband, was in intensive care; for seven weeks, he was either in the hospital or in rehab. She was going to tell her mother. Neither ever called to check on him. Should we just consider her out of our lives forever, or try to make amends and suffer from her favoritism? By the way, one of her sisters told me my mother-in-law is the most hateful person she has ever known. It has been painful for me to watch my husband suffer from his mother’s indifference to him and our family. S. S.: Make amends for what – loving your husband? Valuing yourself, children and grandchildren? Knowing how to add 2 + 2? If you won’t “celebrate” his “decision” to stop calling and visiting this sad, miserable, stunted excuse for a parent that the cosmos saw fit to dump on your poor husband, then let me do it: Whoooooee!!! It isn’t my place to decide to pull the plug on her, nor is it yours. Only he can. But your blessing carries more weight, presumably, than anyone’s but his own. So please give it explicitly, if you haven’t already: “If you want to maintain a relationship with your mother, then I will support you in what you need. But I am probably long overdue to say this: She doesn’t deserve a son as wonderful as you and hasn’t deserved the steady attention you showed her all those years with only contempt in return. So if you’re ready to decide once and for all that her emotional sickness is not your problem anymore, then I am ready and eager to support that, too.” Whoooooee!!! I mean, sure, life as the child of anyone on a “most hateful person” list is nothing to celebrate. But the life after releasing yourselves of any obligations to, expectations of and shared oxygen exchanges with her? That sounds pretty great to me. With apologies to Maya Angelou: When someone shows you who she is and her own sister confirms it and your experience tells you not to subject yourself to her harm again, then don’t waste any more of your brief time on Earth not believing it. And give her son a hug. Email Hax at tellme@washpost.com, follow her on Facebook at www.facebook.com/carolyn.hax or chat with her online at noon Eastern time each Friday at www.washingtonpost.com.

DEAR ABBY | ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Man meets captivating new candidate amid his divorce

Dear Abby: I am recently separated, and my divorce will be final soon. I have met a woman I didn’t even know could exist. She’s perfect for me. The problem is, she lives an hour and a half away and can’t drive at night due to a medical condition. I have fallen for her, and it’s mutual. The issues are the distance and the fact that her father just passed away. She’s a widow living with her toxic mother. We both want this to work, but she needs time and space. I’m willing to give it to her because I believe she is totally worth it. This is the second serious relationship in my life. My ex and I were together for decades, but among other bad things, she cheated on me. I’m wondering if you have some advice for me. This new woman is my true “unicorn.” I’d do anything for her. I want to be with her, and she says the same, but even though her mother is toxic, she doesn’t seem to want to leave her and the bad situation she’s in. It’s early, I know, but I’m willing to wait. We have so much in common. She hasn’t asked for anything except time and space, but I’m almost 40. (She’s a little older.) I’m so clueless with relationships. I’m scared and excited. We want to be a family with a home. Please help me out here. – Confused in South Carolina Dear Confused: You need to summon enough patience for all of this to play out. You are still married, and, frankly, you need time to regain your balance after a bad marriage that lasted decades. While I’m sure your “unicorn” is a very special woman, she needs time to grieve her father’s death and to decide whether she wants to live apart from her mother who – face it – may always be part of the package deal. Happiness and excitement are intoxicating. Do not act impetuously. Take this very slowly. Those long, inconvenient drives may help you to gain perspective. With time, if this is as right as you are hoping it will be, you’ll have the happy ending you’re hoping for. Dear Abby: My friend invites me for dinner often, and I keep coming up with vague excuses about why I cannot come. The reason for my reluctance is her poor kitchen hygiene. The fridge always has old food and spillage, and her kitchen counters and sink are littered with dirty dishes and leftovers. She doesn’t wash her hands before cooking, either. I have helped her clean her kitchen many times while visiting, thinking she perhaps just needed guidance, but her old habits stick. It feels awkward and inappropriate to tell her the reason for my continuous cancellations. How would you proceed? – Friend in Sticky Situation Dear Friend: You aren’t going to change her. The way to handle this would be to invite her over to your place for dinner, agree to have your meals at a restaurant or bring carryout to her place. To My Muslim Readers: At sundown, it is time for the breaking of the Ramadan fast. Happy Eid al-Fitr, everyone. – Love, Abby

Louie in arrears

It was the first of another month, and I found Unlucky Louie hunched over a corner table in the club lounge. He and his checkbook were trying to cope with a stack of unpaid bills.

“This is awful,” Louie groaned. “The phone company wants money; they say they’ve carried me longer than my mother did. And here’s a letter from the power company telling me they will be delighted if I finally pay up – but I’ll be de-lighted if I don’t.”

Louie tried to prop up his checkbook balance in that afternoon's penny Chicago game, but he couldn't have been delighted after today's deal. He played at 3NT after West overcalled in spades and East raised. As the cards lay, West could always have beaten the contract by leading a spade, but he was reluctant to give away a trick and started with the jack of clubs, hoping East would get in and lead a spade through Louie's presumed king.

Louie took the ace of clubs and then dummy's king and queen. When East threw a spade, Louie took the A-K of diamonds, disdaining a finesse with the jack that might lose to East.

Louie then led a third diamond, hoping West would win. Instead, East produced the queen and led a spade, and defense took five tricks plus West's jack of clubs. Down three.

Louie can make 3NT. A simple line is to take the three top clubs and the A-K of diamonds and exit with the fourth club to West. Then West must lead a spade, letting Louie's king score, or break the heart suit, letting Louie win a third heart trick. Either way, Louie gets his ninth trick.

The World’s Lightest Wheelchair

For those of us who’ve found daily activities becoming more challenging, there’s a remarkable breakthrough in mobility that’s changing lives. This ultra-lightweight wheelchair is nothing like the bulky and heavy models of yesterday weighing over 35lbs! - imagine gliding effortlessly through your garden again, joining your family at the park, or meeting friends for coffee, all without worry of fatigue or dependency. Why not take that first step toward renewed freedom? Your next chapter of independence is here.

Throughout the ages, there have been significant advancements in mobility aids. From canes to walkers, rollators, and scooters, these devices were created to help those with mobility issues maintain their independence. However, there haven’t been any truly revolutionary new products in this field until now. Until now, that is, because a team of engineers has developed something that’s set to change the game. They’ve created the world’s lightest wheelchair, weighing only 13.5 lbs, a personal mobility solution that’s been called a game-changer. It’s called the Featherweight Wheelchair, and there is nothing out there quite like it.

★★★★★ Lightweight wheelchair

It’s so light weight that it’s no problem to lift in and out of the back of my car. It’s also easy to set up and collapse down. It is very compact and the wheels come off for compact packing alongside luggage or groceries etc. My Mom finds it very comfortable to ride in as well and enjoys the look. We both love it.

The first thing you’ll notice about the Featherweight Wheelchair is how light it is! This is the world’s lightest wheelchair at 13.5lbs, making it possible for anyone to lift into a vehicle. It’s modern design and custom color options make it very lightweight, durable, and great to look at.

Why take our word for it? Call now, and receive $50 Off when you purchase a Matte Black Featherweight Wheelchair! Only $599! Mention CODE 50FEATHER to start your journey towards effortless mobility.

4 tips on how to take care of your lawn this spring

Chris McKeown
Guest columnist

The month of April is about to start. April is a great month for those who truly enjoy mowing their grass. This is when the grass naturally grows very fast.

Here are my tips on how to take care of your lawn this month.

Apply a fertilizer with pre-emergent weed control

Hopefully, you followed my fertilizer advice with the two fall feedings with a high nitrogen fertilizer. If you did, your lawn already has a deep green color and is growing. You may have already mowed it. This is the advantage of fall feeding. You cannot gain these benefits with only a spring feeding.

The only spring feeding I like to recommend is the fertilizer that is combined with pre-emergent weed control. You still have time to apply this. If you apply high nitrogen fertilizer now, your grass could struggle later. The nitrogen will cause the blades to grow unproportionate to the roots. When the summer heat arrives, the roots might not be able to support the blades.

Pay attention to mowing height

If you did the fall feeding, you very likely will need to mow your lawn more than once a week to start the season. This is the effect of the fertilizer combined with the perfect spring growing conditions. This will not last all season. The growth will slow as we get into May.

The first time you mow, it is okay to lower the blade to a height of two inches. This will remove all of the winter damage from the grass blades. Then, each time you mow after this, raise the blade a quarter of an inch. Do this until you are mowing at a height of 3-3½ inches. This is the height you want to mow for the rest of the season.

April is a great month for those who truly enjoy mowing their grass. NAOMI SKINNER/TIMES RECORD NEWS

The mowing height is very important to a healthy lawn. The longer blades hold more moisture and make more food to support the root system. Longer blades also help the soil retain moisture as they shade the roots. Shorter blades leave the soil more exposed to sunlight.

Don't worry about the annual ryegrass

In the upcoming week, you will also see clumps of dark green grass that is growing faster than your regular turf grass. These clumps are annual ryegrass whose seeds found their way into your lawn. Annual ryegrass is a cool season grass. The seeds germinated in the late fall when the temperatures dropped. The ryegrass continues to grow in the warming temperatures of spring.

This grass is really frustrating to lawn fanatics. They are willing to do whatever it takes to eradicate this uninvited guest to the turf party. Unfortunately, since it is grass, there are not any herbicides that will kill it without also killing the good grass. The good news is the annual ryegrass can take a hint, knowing when to leave the party. This will happen with warmer temperatures. Since it is a cool season, grass it will go away on its own when it gets warmer.

Control weeds with selective herbicides

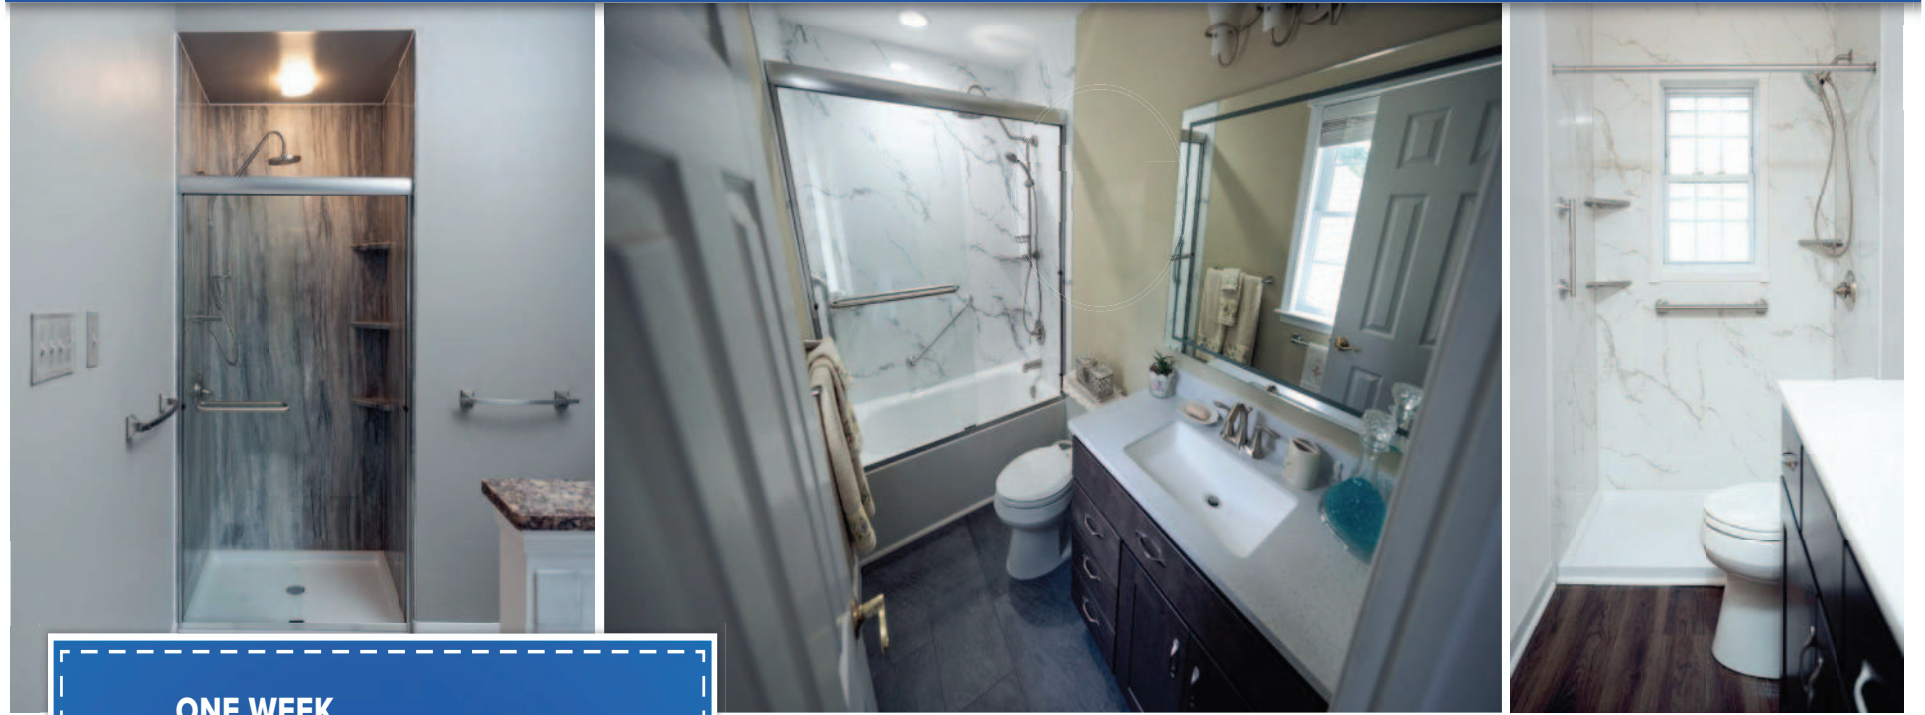

As the season progresses, you will get weeds, even if you applied preemergent weed control. This is because those products only prevent weeds that start as seeds. Many weeds are perennials, which means they will return from roots that are in the soil.

Most of these are broad-leaved weeds. They can easily be controlled with selective herbicides. These products kill weeds without hurting the grass. You will want to use a liquid product that is applied by spraying. This way, you only need to use them where you see the weeds growing. You want to avoid applying weed killers to the entire lawn. It's wasteful and bad for the environment.

You should also wait to spray flowering weeds until after they finish flowering. This is because, in reality, these weeds are also blooming plants. They bloom early and are a food source for early bees and other pollinating insects. If you allow them to flower one more time, you will be helping the pollinators.

THE AMISH COOK

Reminiscing on camping with the kids, and a recipe for grilled pineapple burgers

Gloria Yoder
Special to Cincinnati Enquirer
USA TODAY NETWORK

The days I have been waiting on are coming into reality. Ah, the wonder of spring! There is nothing quite like those first days of sunshine, warm enough to warm your body and heart. Somehow to me it feels like God’s love gently shining down on me. It won’t take care of all things in life, but it helps me connect to the love of God who makes all things well despite the difficult dimensions. The children are loving it. On Saturday, Hosanna was yelling in the backyard. At first, I thought she had spotted a snake, so I ran outside to see if I could help. On the way there, I learned that her insistent cries were really shrieks of delight – she had spied the first flowers blooming. She wanted Mom to come see them now!

Every day, the children ask to go barefoot. Some days their wish is granted, other times they simply need to wait until it has again warmed up a tad. As a little girl, my mother recalls how they were allowed to run barefoot around the house thrice on May 1. The temperatures will vary on your location, and then, of course, whether you have green grass to run on or if you happen to live in the city. I’ve always been a country girl at heart. I enjoyed animals, the smell of fresh hay and the like. On the other hand, with having friends who live in the city, I have come to appreciate city life in a new way. We need people willing to do either one, right? I can hardly wait to get my hands back in the garden. With it drying off, it makes me want to get it tilled and stick in some seed potatoes and onions in. Most of my seeds are sitting here, waiting for the appointed planting time. We are starting over with our strawberry patch this year (you wouldn’t have wanted to see the old patch a year ago). I like trying new things, so Julia and I were debating whether we want to try something new or stick with our old faithful Honey-oyes. Peas, sweet corn and watermelon rank at the top of the children’s favorites. When I compare the

Grilled pineapple burgers

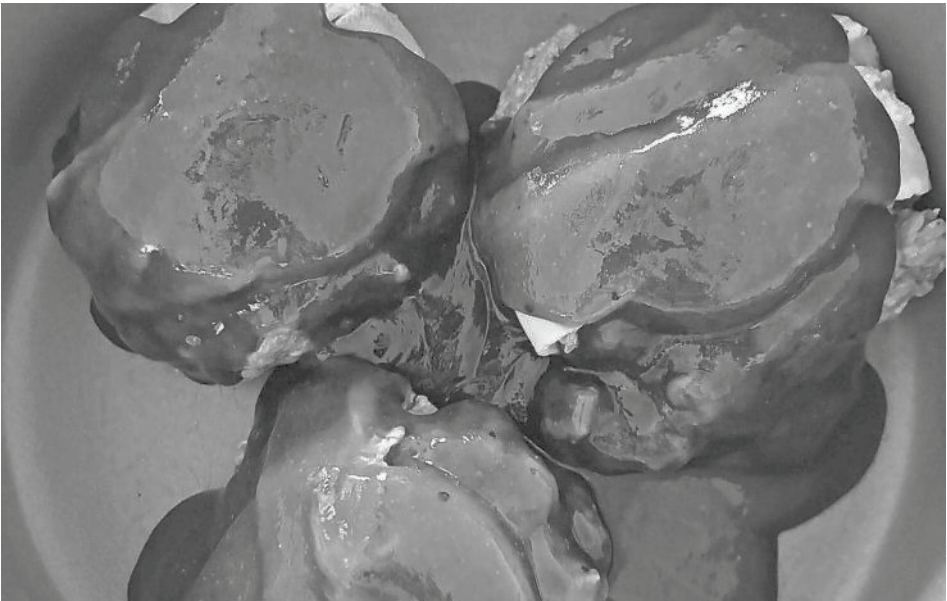

Ingredients

- 2 pounds ground beef
- 3 tablespoons Italian salad dressing
- 1 teaspoon salt
- ½ teaspoon black pepper
- 8 pineapple rings
- 8 slices bacon, uncooked
- ¾ cup barbecue sauce
- ¼ cup brown sugar
- ¼ cup honey
- 1 tablespoon lemon juice

Instructions

- Mix ground beef, Italian salad dressing, salt and pepper.
- Shape into eight patties.
- Press a pineapple slice onto each patty.
- Wrap each patty with a bacon slice.
- Secure with a toothpick by inserting it like you would a needle in fabric.
- Mix barbecue sauce, brown sugar, honey and lemon juice.
- Place the burgers in a dish.
- Pour all the sauce over burgers.
- Cover and refrigerate for at least two hours.
- Grill burgers over medium heat, basting with the barbecue sauce it was marinating in.

price and time of buying, planting and tending to something like peas I couldn’t justify it. But when I see those bare feet padding into the house with a delighted shout, “Mom! They’re ready,” I can’t say no. And you know, as the children grow older, I also have more hands-on deck to pull weeds, water and fertilize. It’s amazing how much zest everyone can have to help plant and how little is left when the sun is beating, and the weeds grow as daytime temps reach triple digits. That’s the way we learn, right? I have yet to find a great harvest of blessings of any sort, without some toil, tears or sweat. Ranking at the top of the children’s priority list for this spring and summer is camping. I enjoy camping, though I can’t say it doesn’t take some “homework” on my end. Camping is one of those things that were at the core of our family times with Daddy; he was the instigator and motivator. I won’t deny it, camping without him is not easy. If God determines it best to use things in life that hurt, that is OK, because He really is God. His plan is still what we would choose all over again. I don’t think I’ll ever forget that first summer I went camping with the children after Daniel passed. We hitched up our horse to our open wagon and piled it high with camping and swimming gear. It was one of those things that truly felt like more than I could do, but then I also couldn’t not do it.

That evening was one of those times I could feel the angels around us. I looked at the little ones, ages one through ten, sitting on their little camp chairs, the fire casting dancing shadows on their faces; it was precious. I knew there will be more blessings as a family, if we keep on keeping on. The children are now old enough to help plan, prepare and clean up afterward (not a favorite). The latest brainstorm is sleeping in the blind back in the chestnut grove. Sounds like fun, we’ll see, maybe at least some of us would fit up in there. Thirteen years ago, when Julia was a baby, the three of us went camping for two nights at a state park. I’ll never forget the leisure times we spent together. Among the food I had prepared for the event were grilled pineapple burgers. Perhaps I’ll make them again for the children in our next cookout, though up front, I know there will be at least one lass who will request to eat her pineapple separate from her burger. Tell you what: eat it your way and do what strikes your own fancy. If you opt out on the pineapples, I won’t feel bad. It takes all kinds of people to make the world go around, you know.

Discover the best secluded beaches in Florida

Palm Beach Post
USA TODAY NETWORK - FLORIDA

With 1,350 miles of coastline, Florida has plenty of pristine, untouched and uncrowded beach options to keep you sane through the summer. Heck, through the winter and fall, too. Ready for a beach day? Looking for a quiet beach to spend your spring break? Here are some of the most pristine, least crowded beaches in Florida, starting from the northeast and working south around the peninsula to the northwest.

Atlantic Beach, Jacksonville

Vital statistics: Always open
What to love: If your idea of a beach day is bumming around barefoot in shades, shelling the shore during low tide, Atlantic Beach will be heaven. This historic Jacksonville beach near the Florida/Georgia line has somehow retained its Florida beach bum personality, with a dash of Southern debutante mixed in, the Travel Channel wrote. The beaches are wide, the neighborhood is quiet. In fact, Jacksonville NewTimes journalist Mark Woods (yes, the Mark Woods who’s walked Jax twice) wrote that the most pedestrian-friendly street in Duval County is Beach Avenue in Atlantic Beach. “It’s the rare street where vehicles don’t rule the road. Walkers, runners, cyclists and dogs do,” he wrote. Address: Atlantic Beach: 800 Beach Ave, Atlantic Beach; 904-247-5800

Coral Cove Park, Tequesta

Vital statistics: 15 acres, 600 feet of guarded beach, open sunrise to sunset
What to love: The primary draw of this quiet beach – the county’s northernmost – is the snorkeling. With clear waters and multiple rock formations within wading distance of shore, Coral Cove allows you to swim with the tropical fishes, stingrays and seahorses. In addition to its guarded beach, Coral Cove also offers 600 feet of Intracoastal Waterway frontage that’s paddleboard-perfect. Address: Coral Cove Park: 1600 S. Beach Road, Tequesta; 561-624-0065

John D. MacArthur State Park, Palm Beach Gardens

Vital statistics: 438 acres, two miles of unguarded beach, open 8 a.m. to sunset
What to love: The only state park in Palm Beach County, MacArthur truly is a local treasure. A 1,600-foot boardwalk carries you from an exhibit-filled nature center to a beach of untamed, abiding beauty. From certain vantage points on the boardwalk, you can block out all signs of civilization and imagine what it was like to be an early settler plying these waters. And if your party isn’t up to the walk, trams will ferry you between parking lot and beach. Reef and rock outcroppings in shallow water near the park are a popular destination for snorkelers and scuba divers hoping to see squid, schools of snook and colorful tropical fish. Address: John D. MacArthur State Park: 11611 Ellison Wilson Rd., Palm Beach Gardens; 561-624-6952

Ocean Ridge Hammock Park, near West Palm Beach

Vital statistics: Eight acres, 1,100 feet of unguarded beach, open sunrise to sunset
What to love: What this low-key beach lacks in amenities – it doesn’t have restrooms, and it’s one of only two Palm Beach County beach parks without lifeguards (the other is Jupiter’s Ocean Cay) – it makes up for with the singularly beautiful trail that zig-zags to the beach through dense coastal hammock. Walking through it feels like you’ve entered a fairy tale set in South Florida. Address: Ocean Ridge Hammock Park: 6620 N. Ocean Blvd., Ocean Ridge; 561-276-3990

Gulfstream Park, Delray Beach

Vital statistics: Seven acres, 600 feet of guarded beach, open sunrise to sunset
What to love: Gulfstream Park is often referred to as “a hidden gem,” thanks to its low profile and small size. The well-manicured park area is packed with shady picnic tables, grills, a play area and swings for toddlers. Address: Gulfstream Park: 4489 N. Ocean Blvd., Delray Beach; 561-629-8775

Atlantic Dunes Park, Delray Beach

Vital statistics: Seven acres, 450 feet of guarded beach, open 8 a.m. to sunset daily
What to love: If you prefer solitude and serenity to the busier scene on Delray’s primary beach, Atlantic Dunes is for you. And you’ve got two ways to reach the beach from Ocean Boulevard. The most direct route is the wide boardwalk. The other, marked by a small sign bearing the image of a blue stick figure, is a hard-packed, 300-foot nature trail that leads you through a tropical hammock. The live oaks and seagrapes can get so dense that you might need to lift your sunglasses to see the path ahead. Address: Atlantic Dunes Park: 1605 S. Ocean Blvd., Delray Beach; 561-243-7250

Sebastian Inlet, Space Coast

Vital statistics: 3 miles of beach, open 24 hours a day, 365 days a year
What to love: Fishermen and surfers have long loved where ocean meets sand at the Sebastian Inlet. The three-mile stretch of pristine oceanfront is as good as yours, as the surf crowds have bigger waves to catch. Locals love this beach because of where it’s situated – right at the spot where the water makes the subtle switch from deep blue to Caribbean turquoise. Oh, and because of the bottle-nose dolphins and manatee sightings. Address: Sebastian Inlet: 9700 South Highway A.1.A; Melbourne Beach; 321-984-4852

Pass-a-Grille Beach, St. Pete

What to love: The charming, Old Florida feel of this historic town is what sets it apart from other beautiful beaches that stretch from St. Pete to Clearwater. The core of the town is only a block wide from beach to bay, with the soft sandy beach on one side and the Intracoastal on the other. Take your time strolling (barefoot, if you really want to catch the vibes) through the downtown as you pop into quaint shops and colorful galleries. Address: Pass-a-Grille Beach: St. Pete Beach

St. George Island State Park, St. George Island (Northwest Florida)

Vital statistics: 28-mile island; open from 8 a.m. until sundown, 365 days a year
What to love: For beachgoers, bird-watchers and year-round fishermen, St. George is a go-to destination. With miles of undeveloped beach on this barrier island, it’s a perfect setting for a quiet taste of paradise. On the Gulf side, you’ll get blue waters, white sands and even some dolphin sightings, while on the bay side, you’ll enjoy healthy marshes with wading birds and nature trails. Address: St. George Island State Park: 1900 E. Gulf Beach Drive; St. George Island; 850-927-2111

Migration mania

Elizabeth Weise USA TODAY

Birds are on the move as their annual spring migration begins. Radar tracking allows you to follow along to see what birds are flying overhead as the birds move to their summer feeding grounds. • “The movements are massive,” said Andrew Farnsworth, a migration ecologist at Cornell University who works with the university’s ornithology lab. “On a big night in the spring, you’re talking 450 to 500 million birds flying under cover of darkness.” • It’s a time of year when local birds that went south for the winter return or birds heading farther north stop to feed. • “Right now we’re seeing lots of movement in Florida and the Southeastern United States, as well as in some Mid-western states,” Farnsworth said.

Birds

“The ruby-crowned kinglet, swamp sparrow and eastern phoebe are starting to migrate. They’ve mostly spent their winter in the Southeast and are starting to move north,” he said.

“In areas like Kansas, you’re seeing a lot of waterfowl on the move, along with sparrows,” he said. Species include the fox sparrow, the American tree sparrow, the dark-eyed junco, the red-winged blackbird and the common grackle.

Cornell University’s bird lab hosts a BirdCast Migration Dashboard that gives daily summaries of radar-based nocturnal bird migration. With it, you can watch the progress of birds as they waft their way across the nation and even track how many flew over your county the night before.

The system uses radar because most species migrate at night, some at altitudes as high as 15,000 feet, and aren’t visible to the naked eye.

When is peak bird migration?

In the contiguous United States, peak spring bird migration runs approximately between March 1 and June 15, though some species migrate earlier or later. Fall migration is generally between Aug. 1 and Nov. 30.

Peak migration is defined by the seasonal window during which about 50% of nighttime bird migration traffic passes through an area. On a map you can see a wave of peak migration move up from the southernmost United States to the far north as temperatures slowly rise over the course of the spring.

The biggest peaks are still to come.

“It’s not until April that you really start to get the big bang of bird diversity,” Farnsworth said. “The peak migration comes like a wave across the United States, breaking from south to north.”

What’s migrating near you?

BirdCast has live, local bird migration alerts so you can see what’s flying through your area at any time.

Numbers are especially high right now in New Mexico, Texas, Oklahoma and somewhat in the Maryland-New Jersey area.

There’s also a migration prediction map that shows upcoming nocturnal migrations. For example, the night of March 10-11, an estimated 20 million birds were predicted to be migrating in the United States. Areas of high migration include Iowa, central Texas and up into Oklahoma.

That night in Des Moines County, Iowa, an estimated 158,700 birds crossed the county, including snow geese, dark-eyed juncos, killdeer, white-throated sparrows, yellow-bellied sapsuckers, northern shovelers and buffleheads.

Why do birds migrate?

In North America, birds typically fly south for the winter before food is less available during the colder months, then back north in the spring to take advantage of growing insect populations, budding plants and good nesting locations.

Come winter, those same birds will fly south again to escape the cold and find better food sources.

There are five types to look for, with larger birds tending to make longer trips.

- Permanent residents: These are birds who don’t always migrate, sometimes because there’s enough food where they live. They can include the American crow, the common raven, mourning doves, wild turkeys and, in Florida, many types of herons.
- Altitudinal migrants: These are birds who change altitude, not location, generally up or down a mountain. Think of the Rocky Mountains and birds such as Clark’s nutcracker, the mountain chickadee and rosy finches. Whether higher elevation birds move depends on local conditions.
- Short-distance migrants: These can include the eastern phoebe, the yellow-bellied sapsucker and the song sparrow.
- Medium-distance migrants: These are birds that migrate a few hundred miles. They might breed in the Northeastern U.S. and winter in the Southeast. Some breed in the eastern deciduous forests and migrate to Central and South America or the Caribbean. These are often shorebirds. Species include many types of warblers, the western tanager and the snow bunting.

- Long-distance migrants: These birds fly thousands of miles, often from the northern United States and Canada to wintering grounds in Central America and South America, sometimes as far as 8,000 miles. These are often shorebirds, including birds that breed on the tundra and winter in southern South America. Some species include the arctic tern, Hudsonian godwit, long-tailed jaeger and the bobolink. The blackpoll warbler songbird can fly from as far as Alaska to the Amazon.

Exactly how birds know where and when to migrate, especially those that have never made the flight before, is still something of a mystery. Research shows that length of day, smell, the location of the sun and the stars, and even sensing the earth’s magnetic field are all involved.

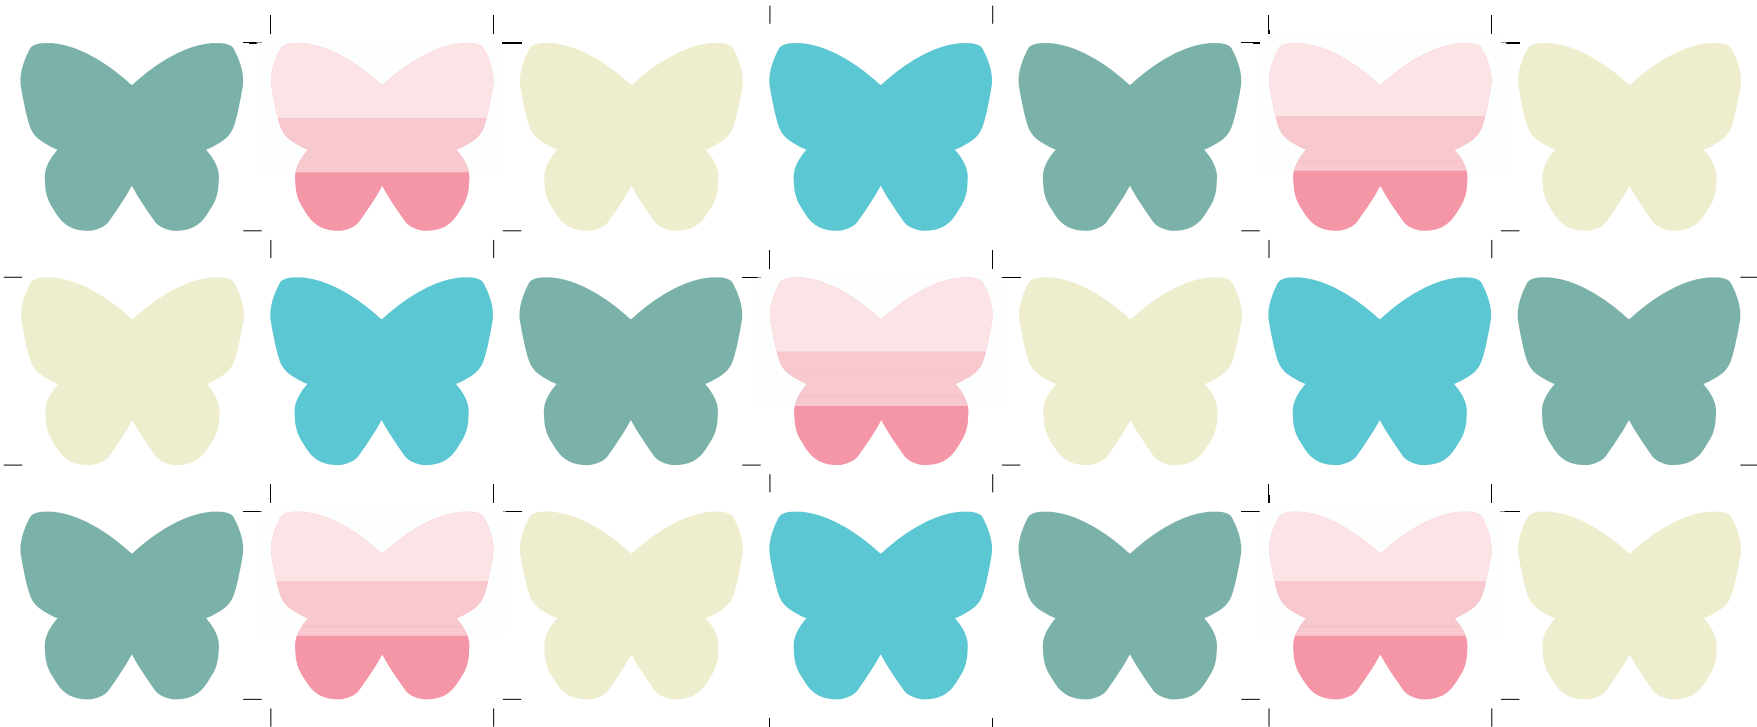

Changes to when plants first bud and insects become available due to a warming planet are wreaking havoc with some species’ migration patterns. The mismatch of their migration with food sources puts them out of sync with what’s available, leaving them hungry just when they need to eat so they can breed.

To aid birds as they migrate, ornithologists urge Americans to turn off nonessential lighting from 11 p.m. to 6 a.m. during peak migration periods. Bright lights can attract and disorient birds that migrate at night, potentially causing fatal collisions with buildings.

DISAPPEARING BUTTERFLIES

HABITAT DESTRUCTION, HOTTER CLIMATE, INSECTICIDE USE CITED AS CAUSES OF DECLINING POPULATIONS

Elizabeth Weise USA TODAY

Over the past 20 years the U.S. butterfly population has declined 22%, a dramatic loss that has scientists concerned.

- “The easy number to think about is the total number of butterflies in your yard. If you had a garden in 2000 and you saw 100 butterflies, you’d see only about 78 in the year 2020,” said Collin Edwards, an ecological modeler with the Washington state Department of Fish and Wildlife and first author on the paper being published in the journal Science.
- Researchers across the United States collected data on more than 35 butterfly monitoring programs. It included data from 12.6 million individual butterflies comprising 554 species taken in 756,957 surveys.
- The results were worse than researchers expected.
- “It would be really nice to be able to say that this one group of butterflies is in trouble but everywhere else is fine. But no. They are all in trouble, everywhere,” Edwards said.
- The chief causes of the decline include habitat destruction, drier and hotter climate because of climate change and insecticide use.

Butterflies have been declining for a long time, but the scientists began in 2000 because most butterfly monitoring programs didn’t exist before that. They stopped in 2020 because many of those programs shut down during COVID, which could have skewed their data.

While butterflies might just seem like pretty insects that make children smile and add color and beauty to gardens, they’re important for two reasons.

The first is that butterflies are important in nature. “It’s easy to forget that the flapping around pretty part is just one portion of their life cycle,” said Edwards. “The eggs, pupae and caterpillars are in your garden year-round, and a lot of birds rely on them for food.”

Any decrease in butterflies also means other insects, ones that aren’t as charismatic or easy to spot, are also decreasing.

We have more data on butterflies because they’re so easy to count.

“They’re really easy to identify on the wing,” Edwards said. “I’ve done wasp studies where you have to catch them and take them back to the laboratory to look at them under a microscope to identify them.”

Insects are tiny, but they play a critical role in the ecosystems we depend on and they, too, are in trouble.

A meta-analysis of 16 scientific studies done in 2021 found that insect populations globally have declined by about 45% in just the past 40 years. It’s one of the reasons your windshield is less covered in bug splatter than in your grandparents’ time.

This large-scale decrease in the number of insects in the world is a threat not just to ecosystems but also agriculture.

According to the Intergovernmental Science-Policy Platform on Biodiversity and Ecosystem Services, insects pollinate about 75% of global crops and as much as $577 billion in global food production relies on them.

That’s not to say that butterflies aren’t also important for farmers. One study found that butterflies and flies contribute as much as $120 million a year to cotton producers in Texas.

The good news is that butterflies can rebound quickly, when given appropriate habitat.

“A lot of endangered species, like killer whales or elephants, are long-lived and only have one offspring at a time, so it takes a long time for the population to grow,” Edwards said. “But butterflies can lay hundreds of eggs and have two or three generations a year. So if you make it possible for not just one or two to survive but hundreds, they can rebound quickly.”

While home gardeners can’t fix widespread habitat loss or global warming, it is possible to make a haven for butterflies in your yard.

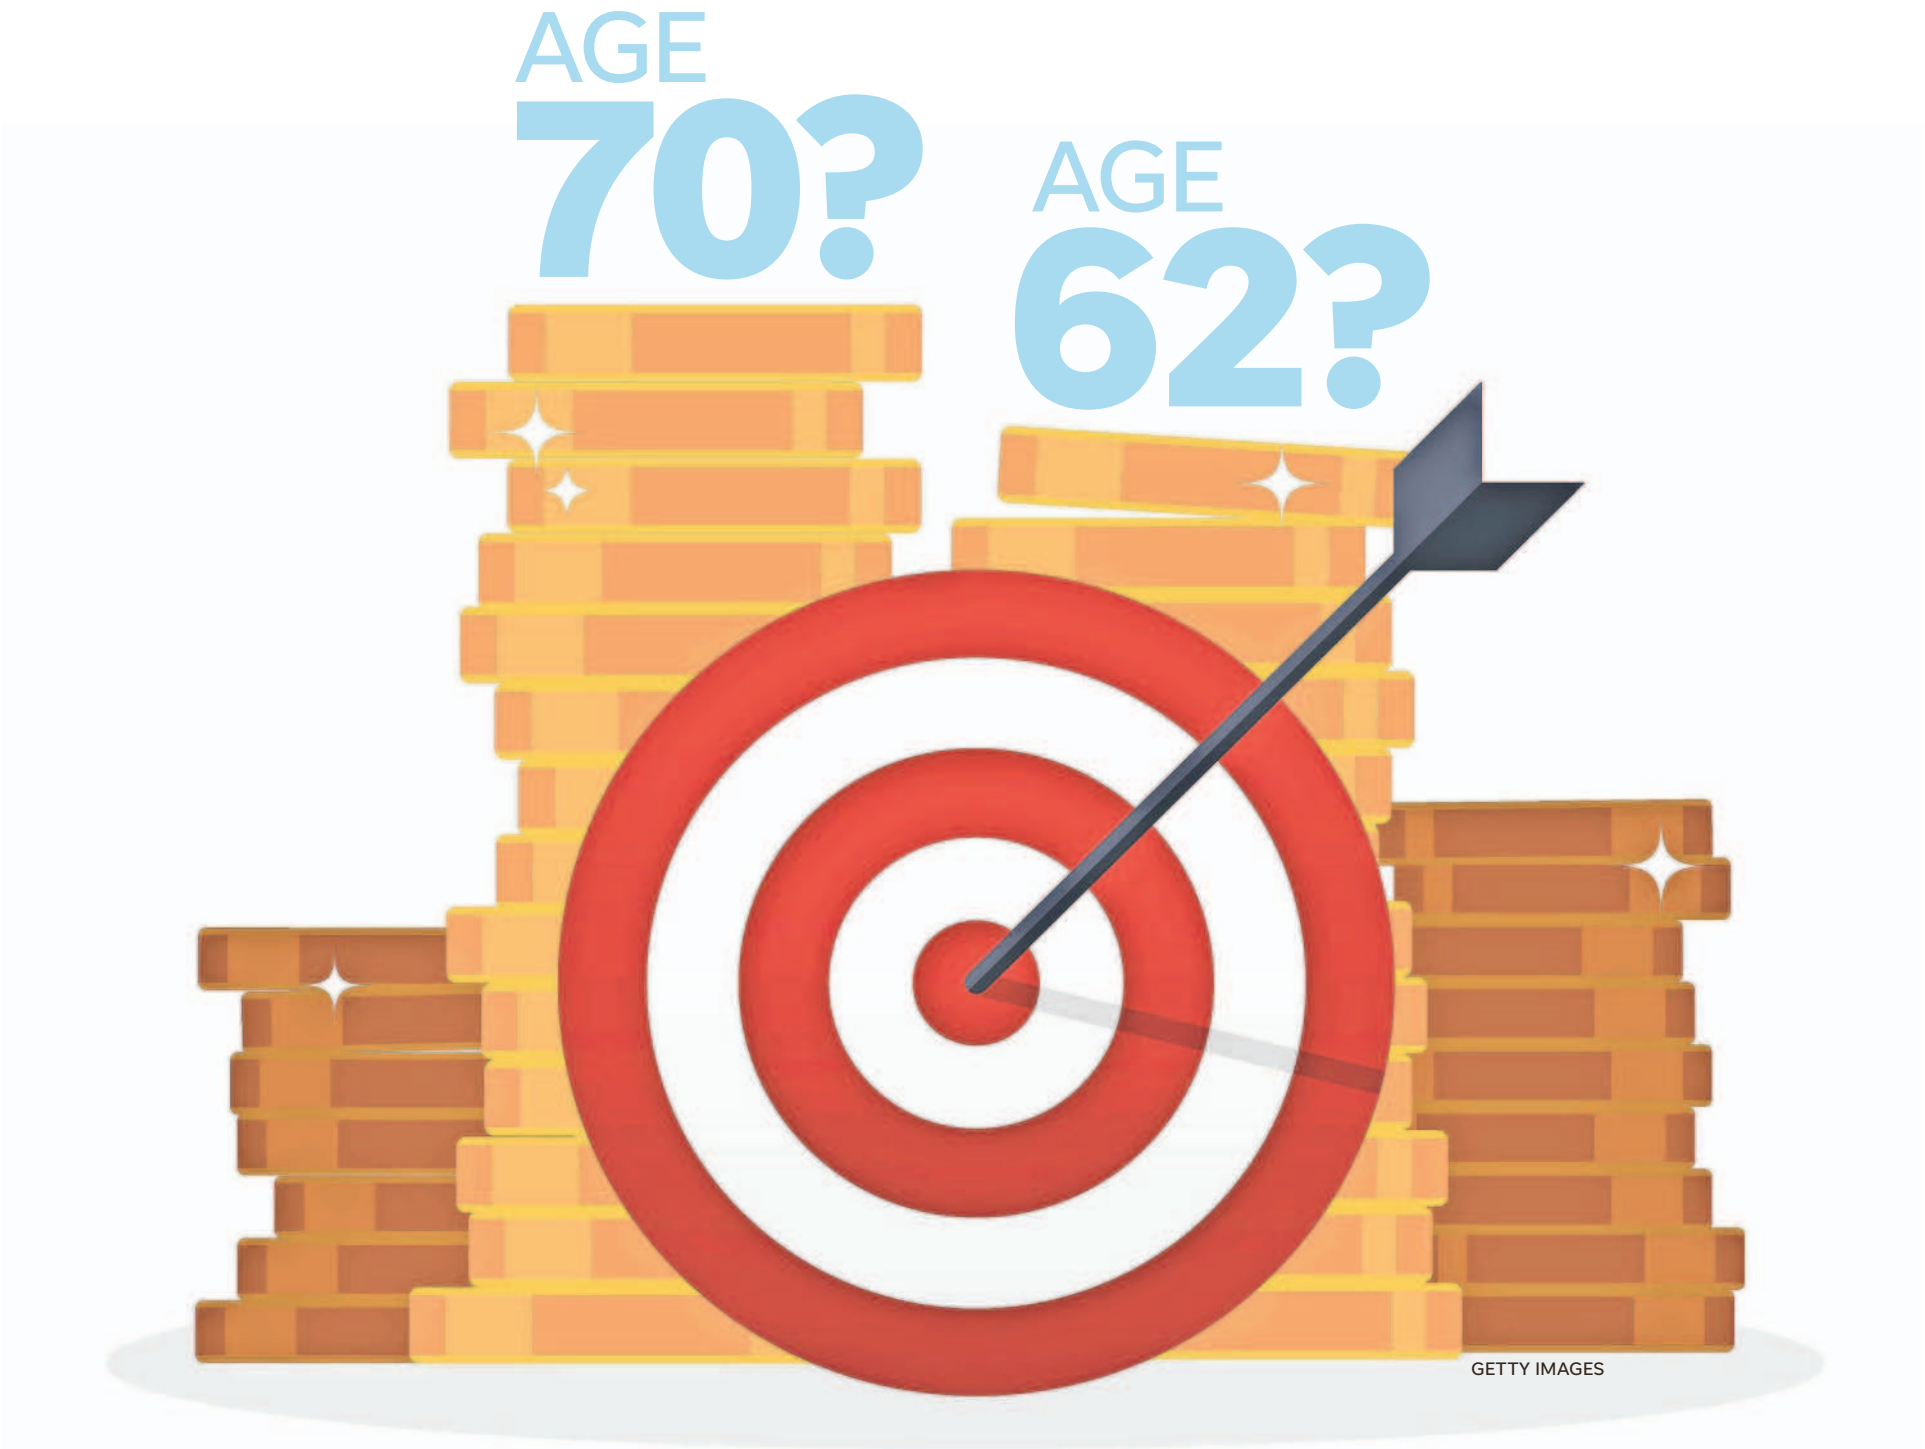

Even a small space can make a big difference for local species, said Edwards. “Local changes to improve habitats for butterflies also help buttress them against the effects of climate change.”

According to researchers at Tufts University, this can include simple changes such as:

- Planting native plants that will provide food for your local species.
- Minimizing insecticide use.
- Growing a diverse group of plants to provide nesting habitats and allowing some ground to remain bare.
- Letting at least some of your lawn grow into a more meadow-like area.

WHERE TO AIM FOR BEST CLAIM

USE THE RIGHT NUMBERS TO FIGURE YOUR OPTIMAL AGE TO TAKE SOCIAL SECURITY

Daniel de Visé and Veronica Bravo USA TODAY

A popular pastime among Americans of a certain age is to wage an internal debate about when to claim Social Security: At age 62? Sixty-five? Seventy? ● In purely monetary terms, as it turns out, the question has a simple answer, and anyone who is curious can find it right on the Social Security website. ● How much money a person will ultimately collect in Social Security depends, in the end, on how long they live. And to answer that question, a good place to start is the Social Security Life Expectancy Calculator. ● Before getting into the correct math, here’s the wrong math.

Seemingly sensible figures

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, average life expectancy is 74.8 years for an American man and 80.2 years for a woman.

For a man approaching retirement, it might seem sensible to use 74.8 as a basis for calculating the ideal age to claim Social Security. As most older Americans know, the longer you wait to claim the benefit, the fatter your monthly check.

Here, then, is a quick comparison of how much cash a retiree will receive in lifetime Social Security benefits if he dies at age 74.8, depending on when he first draws a benefit check. This example uses sample benefit figures from the Social Security website.

At age 62, this hypothetical retiree can claim a monthly check worth $1,400. Assuming he lives to 74.8, he will receive checks for 12.8 years, or 154 months. His total lifetime Social Security benefit, not including cost of living adjustments, works out to roughly $215,600.

At 65, the retiree can claim a check of $1,733. But he’ll only receive that check for 9.8 years. His total lifetime benefit drops to about $204,500.

And the numbers go downhill from there. By age 70, this retiree is reaping a check worth $2,480, but for only 4.8 years. Lifetime benefit: about $143,800.

By that math, a typical American man would be smart to claim Social Security at age 62, the first year of his eligibility.

Most popular age for claiming Social Security benefits

Many retirees do exactly that. According to a Bankrate analysis, 62 is the most popular age for taking Social Security.

The obvious reason why so many Americans take Social Security early is that they need the money. The average American retires at 62, according to multiple surveys. Retirees are supposed to leverage savings and other assets and income to supplement Social Security, but many Americans don’t save for retirement.

Retirees have several other reasons for claiming Social Security early.

“People say, ‘I want to get the money while I can. I don’t know how long I’m gonna live,’ ” said Robert Brokamp, a senior adviser at The Motley Fool.

Retirees also worry that the benefit program might run out of money.

“They are concerned that Social Security is underfunded,” Brokamp said. The retirement trust fund is projected to run short of cash within a decade.

Other retirees take Social Security early because they feel they have no alternative.

“Many people don’t have enough savings,” said Monique Morrissey, a senior economist at the Economic Policy Institute. “And it also makes people nervous to draw down their savings, even if it’s the right thing to do.”

Yet, both Brokamp and Morrissey believe most retirees should wait until age 70 to claim Social Security. The reason is simple human longevity.

That average human lifespan for American men, 74.8, is correct, but it’s misleading.

It’s the average life expectancy for a man at birth. Longevity extends as you age. By the time an American male reaches age 62, his life expectancy is a lot longer.

Right numbers for clearer projection

An American man who turned 62 on March 1 has an average life expectancy of 83.6, according to the Social Security calculator. In other words, he’s likely to live another 21.6 years. A woman with that birthday can expect to live 86.5 years.

Now, let’s figure out how much money a longer-living hypothetical man can expect to draw from Social Security over the remainder of his expected life.

At 62, this hypothetical retiree can still claim a monthly check worth $1,400. But now, assuming he lives to age 83.6, that means he’ll receive checks for 21.6 years, or 259 months. His total lifetime income, not including cost of living adjustments, now works out to roughly $362,600.

At age 65, the retiree can claim a check of $1,733. And now, he’ll receive that check for 18.6 years. His total lifetime income rises to about $386,500.

And the numbers go up from there. By age 70, this retiree is reaping a check worth $2,480, and he can expect to claim it for 13.6 years. Lifetime benefit: about $404,200.

“I’m not in the advice-giving business, but I can say things about averages,” said Gal Wettstein, a senior research economist at the Center for Retirement Research at Boston College. “When you just look at averages, you’re better off postponing claiming until as late as possible, until 70.”

Living to 100: A ‘worst-case scenario’

In a 2022 working paper, three economic researchers concluded that more than 90% of Americans should wait until age 70 to claim Social Security to maximize their benefits. Potential exceptions include people with dire money needs and those who do not expect to live much longer.

“There are people who should wait. And then there are people who have pancreatic cancer,” said Laurence Kotlikoff, a Boston University economist and co-author of the paper.

While Kotlikoff strongly urges most retirees to claim Social Security at 70, his reasons are not about average longevity. Indeed, he accuses the Social Security Administration of economic “malpractice” for posting a longevity calculator on its website.

To Kotlikoff, the reason to delay taking Social Security is based not on average longevity, but on maximum longevity. Kotlikoff said most retirees should “plan to live to your maximum age of life.” In other words, a retirement plan should assume one might live to 100.

“You have to look at the worst-case scenario,” he said. “You can’t play the odds.”

If you plan to live to 100, Kotlikoff said, all the more reason to wait until 70 to claim Social Security.

“Most households are taking Social Security as soon as they retire,” he said, “and that’s way too early.”

RISING COSTS, RISING DEBT

Older Americans are using credit cards to cover groceries, housing

Daniel de Visé USA TODAY

An alarming share of older adults use credit cards to cover basic living expenses, AARP reports in a new survey. • The findings illustrate how the rising costs of food, housing, health care and other expenses threaten the financial health and retirement security of older Americans, according to the advocacy group. • “The kitchen-table economics of food, utilities, health care, all of those things are chipping away at individuals’ abilities to pay down debt,” said Indira Venkat, AARP senior vice president of research.

According to AARP data, 52% of adults ages 50 to 64 have credit card debt, along with 42% of those ages 65 to 74.

The survey covered 4,846 older adults who reported carrying credit card debt. Of that group:

- 47% said they use credit cards to pay for basic living expenses that they could not otherwise afford.
- 48% said they owe $5,000 or more, and 28% carry a balance of $10,000 or more.
- 50% said health-care expenses had contributed to their card debt, especially dental expenses.

Credit card debt is concerning for Americans who are approaching retirement.

“They have to make hard choices: Do they pay down debt, or do they save money for retirement?” Venkat said.

For someone who has already retired, credit card debt can cause even more trouble, because retirees generally live on a fixed income.

For that group, Venkat said “it’s a real challenge to pay down debt without significant trade-offs.”

The AARP survey adds to a growing stack of reports that show older Americans dealing with credit card debt.

A January report from the personal finance site LendingTree found that 97% of retirement-age adults have non-mortgage debt. The average balance: $11,349.

Credit card debt was the most common type among seniors, the analysis found, with 93% carrying a balance. The study drew from credit reports for seniors ages 66 to 71 in the 50 largest American cities.

More than two-thirds of retirees with debt carry balances on their credit cards, according to the 2024 Spending in Retirement survey from the nonprofit Employee Benefit Research Institute. The analysis found retirees were more likely to have credit card debt than other kinds.

The share of older Americans with debt has risen over the decades. Among people 75 and older, 53% of households reported debt in the 2022 Federal Reserve’s Survey of Consumer Finances, up from 21% in 1989.

A few tips, from AARP and other sources, on how to retire your credit card debt

Pay more than the minimum

If you’re determined to pay down your card balance, experts say, get aggressive. The minimum payment, calculated by the card company, typically covers only the interest due and 1% of the balance, said Ted Rossman, senior industry analyst at the personal finance site Bankrate.

To make a real dent, experts say, stop making new charges on the card. Then, bump up your payments. Consider a monthly sum equal to 5% of your gross income. Alternately, make double the minimum payment in the first month. Then, pay the same dollar amount in the months that follow, as the balance falls.

Divide and conquer

If you have more than one credit card, experts say, pick one and get serious about paying it off. Start with the card that carries the highest interest rate, or the one with the smallest balance.

If you pick the card with the smallest balance, you can pay it off quickly, score a psychological victory and “take that item off your spreadsheet,” Venkat said.

If you choose to focus on the card with the highest interest, you will pay less interest over time, saving yourself a lot of money.

Get a zero-APR credit card

While the average credit card interest rate now tops 20%, it’s still possible to sign up for a card that accrues no interest at all for a period of 15, 18 or 21 months.

The zero-APR credit card can be a powerful tool for paying down debt, experts say, because you pay no interest over the months of the promotion.

Be careful, though: Once the promotion ends, the card company will charge interest on any remaining balance.

Call the card company

Another way to pay off a credit card balance more quickly is to persuade the card company to lower your interest rate. The average credit-card interest rate is about 24%, Investopedia reports.

“You can reach out to your credit card provider and try to negotiate,” Venkat said. The issuer may reward you with a lower rate.

DIRECTING DEATH

END-OF-LIFE PLANNING CAN BE DERAILED BY MISCONCEPTIONS, BUT THE PROCESS IS EASIER THAN YOU MIGHT THINK

Anisah Bagasra The Conversation

During the COVID-19 pandemic, many people unexpectedly needed critical care such as ventilators but were unable to communicate their end-of-life wishes to their loved ones.

Researchers like me, who study death and dying, hoped that such scenes would spur more Americans to embrace end-of-life planning by discussing their wishes with family members and by completing an advance directive, which formalizes those wishes into a legal document.

Unfortunately, that did not happen. Prior to the COVID-19 pandemic about 1 in 3 Americans had an advance directive. That number has not increased post-COVID, even among those age 65 and older who were most vulnerable to hospitalization and death during the pandemic.

In the past five years, health care professionals and patient advocacy groups have tried to make advance care planning easier by increasing public education and availability of advance directives in medical settings. But health care professionals frequently lack the time to broach these topics at routine visits or don't feel comfortable having such conversations with their patients.

Conversations about death are difficult and trigger a great deal of anxiety for most individuals.

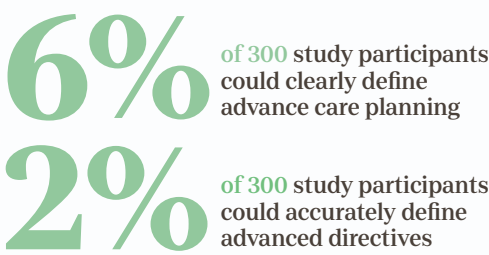

My team's research suggests that the biggest barrier to engaging in end-of-life planning is a lack of knowledge about advance directives and what it takes to complete one.

What is advance care planning?

Advance care planning is the process of communicating with your loved ones about your medical wishes in case you are incapacitated and unable to make health care decisions for yourself. For example, you might discuss whether or in what circumstances you would want to be placed on a ventilator or kept alive on life support.

Many people find it helpful to state these wishes in an advance directive, a legally binding document in which they can also designate a health care agent. The agent agrees to uphold and advocate for these wishes in case of a medical emergency – for example, if the person is in a coma after a car accident. Medical facilities are required to honor an advance directive.

An advance directive does not address funeral planning or what to do with a person's belongings. Those issues are addressed in a will or estate planning.

Why people abstain from planning

One major barrier to advance care planning is that many people simply don't know much about it.

In a study I conducted with colleagues, only 6% of 300 participants could clearly define advance care planning, and only 2% could accurately define advanced directives.

Most people don't exactly know what advance care planning entails. Even if people were aware of these concepts, they often had inaccurate ideas about them, our study showed. For example, many people assumed that advance directives are expensive, require a lawyer to complete like a will or estate planning, and are time-consuming.

In reality, advance directives can be completed for free. These documents are available online and through most medical facilities, and they can take as little as 30 minutes to fill out. Advance directives are specific to the state in which you live and typically require the signatures of two witnesses who are not invested in your health care decisions, but they do not need to be notarized.

Although filling out the necessary document is less burdensome than many people assume, doing so requires speaking with family and friends to determine who understands your wishes and who would be willing to act as your health care agent. That requires more time and effort.

In focus groups we conducted with adults ages 20 to 68 and presented at a 2021 conference, most participants assumed their doctor would make decisions about interventions such as life support. In reality, people's next of kin are tasked with these difficult decisions.

What if your next of kin refuses to remove you from life support but you do not wish to be kept alive? What if your next of kin are your three children and they cannot agree about what to do? What if it is an estranged spouse or parent? These scenarios play out every day in medical facilities throughout the country, exacerbating the pain and anxiety already associated with end of life.

Only about a third of Americans have completed an advance directive.

Even among hospice workers and funeral home directors who work directly with grieving family members, our research found that 39% did not have a designated health care agent. Their reasons included not feeling urgency for appointing a health care agent, lacking time or knowledge about advance care planning, and not having anyone to designate as a health care agent.

How to tackle advance care planning

The first step to carrying out advance care planning is to think about what you want. Do you want to be kept alive by any means necessary? Or would you prefer to not be kept alive with a feeding tube if you are in a coma or persistent vegetative state?

Second, identify one or more people who you feel could make sound decisions on your behalf in a medical emergency. You can usually designate up to three people who can serve as a health care agent in case your first agent cannot be reached. Once you have identified at least one person, carve out time to talk with them about whether they are willing to take on the role and what your wishes are for your end-of-life care.

You can explore resources provided by organizations such as The Conversation Project and the National Institute on Aging to help you navigate these steps.

The next step is simple – download an advance directive form or obtain one from your hospital and fill out the name of your designated agent and their contact information. You can also fill out the section indicating your wishes about life support and other lifesaving measures so that there are no doubts about your wishes. Ask two friends or co-workers to witness and sign.

You can speak with your doctor's office about adding your advance directive to your electronic medical records, give a copy to your health care agent and keep a copy at home in a prominent place. Then you can breathe a sign of relief knowing that in the event of a sudden illness or accident, you are saving your loved ones from a gut-wrenching decision or a big argument about your care.

YOGA NIDRA CAN BE A RELAXING OPTION

Daryl Austin USA TODAY

The modern technique of yoga nidra, also called yogic sleep, connects meditation and yoga.

“The ancient Eastern system is now a universal one that yogis practice and teach all over the world, often in the form of yoga nidra,” says Brett Larkin, a certified yoga instructor and founder of Uplifted Yoga.

Yoga nidra is a yogic practice that combines guided imagery and the yoga posture known as “corpse pose” – a lying-down, supine pose also called savasana or shavasana. The practice is meant to release emotional tension, allow one’s muscles to relax and calm the nervous system.

“It promotes deep states of relaxation while maintaining awareness,” says Maren Nyer, Ph.D., director of yoga studies at Massachusetts General Hospital and an assistant professor of psychology at Harvard Medical School.

During a yoga nidra session, an instructor “guides the individual into a deep state of relaxation using specific techniques in different stages,” explains Nyer.

In many ways, yoga nidra is closer to meditation than to what most people think of as yoga. It’s one of many forms of guided meditation, but also uses the movement and relaxation common to yoga.

As with other meditation techniques, when practicing yoga nidra, one listens to an instructor lead the session either in person or through an app or virtual classroom. “Yoga nidra is the easiest meditation you can ever do,” says Larkin. “You simply lie down and listen to the teacher’s voice guide you through holding your awareness on various parts of your body.”

The goal of the practice is to promote a “restful, systematic unwinding of your unconscious,” Larkin said.

It’s also sometimes used by sleep consultants and sleep app companies to guide one into deeper, more restful sleep. “While it was originally designed to help yogic practitioners gain more awareness,” Larkin explains, “many students now use it as a way to fall asleep.”

Beyond improving sleep quality, yoga nidra has also been shown to improve self-awareness, reduce stress, relieve tension headaches and aid insomnia.

Because yoga nidra doesn’t involve stretching or some of the physically demanding poses of other yoga techniques, it’s a good alternative for people with back pain or preexisting medical conditions who are still interested in the practice.

Nyer says the only people who might want to avoid yoga nidra are those with certain mental health disorders “who may not do well left with their own thoughts.”

For everyone else, yoga nidra might be a welcome option.

“The deeply therapeutic exercise,” says Larkin, “is a methodical practice of directed steps, focused on moving awareness from the external world into the internal world.”

Peanut butter not the perfect protein source

Hannah Yasharoff
USA TODAY

Protein is the macronutrient du jour. Discussions about nutrition online as of late are all about making sure you’re consuming enough protein every day.

The Recommended Dietary Allowance for protein is currently 0.36 grams of protein per pound of body weight, according to Harvard Health, or about 54 grams daily for a person who weighs 150 pounds.

But diet experts are increasingly pushing for consuming higher amounts of protein: upwards of 60 to 90 grams daily. Registered dietitian Jamie Nadeau previously told USA TODAY that she recommends getting “at least 20 grams of protein per meal for satiety,” though she notes everyone has different needs.

To what extent can peanut butter help you reach those goals?

A two-tablespoon serving of peanut butter contains about 7 grams of protein, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture’s food database. That’s not an insignificant amount. But it’s also not the best source if you’re trying to increase your protein intake, registered dietitian Caroline Thomason tells USA TODAY.

“(Peanut butter) gets this reputation that it’s so high in protein,” she says. “It’s just fine. The juice isn’t always worth the squeeze, in my opinion.”

She adds, “I think peanut butter is still super nutritious and a healthy food. You get ... protein, you get a little bit of fiber, you get heart-healthy fat. All of those things are also great. But as a protein source, it’s not the best.”

That doesn’t mean you shouldn’t eat peanut butter. Experts say it just means peanut butter is meant to be a small part of more well-rounded meal. Thomason suggests pairing a serving of peanut butter with a starch, protein and a fruit or vegetable. Some favorite combos include peanut butter on an apple, peanut butter and banana toast and a smoothie or oatmeal with peanut butter.

“Those things are going to help you balance it out and not feel like it’s easy to overeat,” she says.

Looking at it another way, to hit Nadeau’s recommended 20-gram meal goal, you’d have to eat about 6 tablespoons – nearly three servings of peanut butter – which amounts to nearly 600 calories. While experts say eating more than the serving size isn’t harmful per se, there are much easier (and less calorie-dense) options to get that much protein.

Some of the foods highest in protein include the following, per the USDA:

Lentils: 23.6 grams per 1/2 cup of dry lentils

Chicken breast: 22.5 grams per 3.5 ounces

Salmon: 20.3 grams per 3.5 ounce portion

Ground beef: 18.2 grams per 1/2 cup

Ground pork: 17.8 grams per 1/2 cup

Ground turkey: 17.3 grams per 1/2 cup

Plain Greek yogurt: 16.1 grams per single-serving container

Cottage cheese: 11.6 grams per 1/2 cup

Black beans: 9.9 grams per 1/2 cup

1% milk: 8.3 grams per cup

SAIL AWAY

CRUISE POPULARITY TO JAPAN HITS HIGH TIDE

Nathan Diller USA TODAY

If you’ve been considering a cruise to Japan, you’re not alone. ● Google Search interest for cruises to the East Asia country has risen higher compared with other searched cruise destinations, according to the company. ● Searches for “best Japan cruises” increased 273% over the past year, per Google Trends data. “Japan port cruise” and “Cruises to Tokyo” searches also both rose by 71% during that time. ● Japanese cities like Tokyo and Osaka have seen increased interest in recent months, and visiting by cruise ship offers a simple way to see many parts of the country. ● Here’s what travelers should know.

What cruise lines sail in Japan?

More than a dozen cruise lines are scheduled to sail in Japan in 2026, according to Jared Feldman, owner of travel agency Jafeldma Travel. Princess Cruises will have a major presence, he said, alongside others like Royal Caribbean International and Celebrity Cruises.

For those who prefer smaller ships, brands like Viking and Windstar Cruises also have itineraries on offer.

Where do Japan cruises go?

Popular stops include Tokyo, Kobe, Osaka, Naha on Okinawa Island, and Hiroshima. Feldman said there are more than a dozen ports frequented by cruise ships in Japan alone.

Cruises from the country may also visit other destinations like South Korea and Taiwan.

Transpacific cruises sail from U.S. cities like Seattle and Los Angeles, and allow travelers to skip the long-haul flight (though they may have to fly home, depending on their plans). Many are repositioning sailings with more sea days than a typical cruise, Feldman said, and may come at a cheaper rate.

“Similar to cruising domestically or cruising in this region, (you’ve got) anything from a four-night sailing to a two-week sailing or three-week sailing,” he added. “So there’s definitely weekend-type itineraries if you really just want to get a flavor or a taste of Japan, or you can spend significantly more time there.”

Travelers can also visit Japan on world cruises and other longer itineraries.

What is the best time to visit Japan?

Japan is a year-round destination, but Feldman said the most popular time is between March and May when the cherry blossoms are on display.

That’s followed by September to November “because you’ve got mild weather, you’re going to get the full foliage there,” he said.

Travelers will find fewer sailings in the winter, Feldman added, but there are still attractions during that time, such as snow festivals.

Are Japan cruises expensive?

Given the supply and because it’s not as popular as cruise destinations like the Caribbean, Feldman said the prices are “quite attractive.”

For example, Princess’ 2026 Japan cruises currently start at $1,297 per person based on double occupancy, including taxes and fees. Celebrity’s start at $1,581.

Travelers will likely need to factor in airfare. Round-trip flights from New York to Tokyo in January 2026 for a week trip start at $846, according to Google Flights (most flights in 2026 were not available to view).

Abbey, a 26-year-old on the autism spectrum, has experienced plenty of excitement - and plenty of romance - with her boyfriend David since Season 2 of the docu-reality series “Love on the Spectrum,” premiering its third season on Netflix on Wednesday, April 2.

New this week

Power is up for grabs as the organized crime family of Conrad (Pierce Brosnan) and Maeve Harrigan (Helen Mirren) clashes with the rival Stevensons in a kill-or-be-killed battle that threatens to topple empires and ruin lives on “Mobland,” premiering Sunday, March 30, on Paramount+. Caught in the crossfire is Harry Da Souza (Tom Hardy), the street-smart “fixer” as dangerous as he is handsome, who knows too well where loyalties lie when opposing forces collide. As kingdom goes up against kingdom, the only saving grace is a bet-your-life guarantee: family above everything.

Premiering Sunday, March 30, on AMC+, the mystery drama “The Last Anniversary” is set on the remote, but beautiful Scribbly Gum Island, a place of many secrets. The one that made it famous - the disappearance of a young couple decades ago - might have made the island a destination for true-crime tourists, but when Sophie Honeywell (Teresa Palmer) inherits a house on the island, it’s the fresh start she’s craving. After the unwelcome reception she receives on arrival, she begins to investigate the mysteries of the island and finds herself drawn into a complex web of long-held family secrets spanning three generations of women, uncovering far more than ever expected.

Now streaming

The most original musical biopic ever made, the Oscar-nominated “Better Man,” now available on Paramount+, chronicles the meteoric rise, dramatic fall and remarkable resurgence of British pop superstar Robbie Williams, re-imagined as an anthropomorphic chimpanzee with computer-generated imagery, performed by Jonno Davies using motion capture, and voiced by both Williams and Davies. This moving and poignant story about fame, recovery, relationships and redemption also stars Steve Pemberton, Kate Mulvany, Alison Steadman and Damon Herriman.

A meticulous teacher and homemaker, Nancy Vandergroot (Nicole Kidman) finds her picture-perfect life with her husband (Matthew Macfadyen) and son (Jude Hill) tumbling into a twisted tale in the tulip-filled Michigan town of “Holland,” a wildly unpredictable thriller currently streaming on Prime Video. Nancy and her friendly colleague (Gael García Bernal) become suspicious of a secret, only to discover that nothing in their lives is what it seems.

Coming up

Premiering Friday, April 4, on Apple TV+, “Stick” is a new golf comedy series created by Jason Keller and starring and executive produced by Owen Wilson. Wilson stars as Pryce Cahill, an over-the-hill, ex-pro golfer whose career was derailed prematurely 20 years ago. After the collapse of his marriage and getting fired from his job at an Indiana sporting goods store, Pryce hedges his bets, and future, entirely on a troubled 17-year-old golf phenom named Santi (Peter Dinklage). The feel-good comedy co-stars Judy Greer, Marc Maron and Timothy Olyphant and features pro golfers Keegan Bradley, Wyndham Clark, Max Homa, Trevor Immelman and Collin Morikawa.

and as Santa Clause in “Red One” (2024), which featured action stars Dwayne Johnson, Chris Evans and Lucy Liu. And of course, he’s still the spokesman for Farmer’s Insurance.

Timothee Chalamet is riding high after winning the Screen Actors Guild Best Actor award for “A Complete Unknown,” which did poorly at the box office by only earning $110 million against a $70 million cost. Next, he stars with Gwyneth Paltrow; Tyler, the Creator; Penn Jillette; “Shark Tank’s” Kevin O’Leary; and “The Nanny’s” Fran Drescher in the sports drama “Marty Supreme” (due on Christmas Day).

Patrick Schwarzenegger, son of superstar and former California Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger, has full-frontal-nude scenes in season three of “The White Lotus.” Will this start a trend for male frontal nudity as a prerequisite for actors during their casting calls? This could set a whole new standard for actors to, uh, measure up to the roles they are auditioning for!

Barbara Broccoli won’t be picking the next James Bond after all. In fact, she’s sold the 007 franchise to Amazon MGM Studios. After 60 years of producing Bond films with her father, Cubby Broccoli, who died of heart failure in 1996 at 87, she sold the rights – no doubt for a pretty penny. This means that an American company now owns the rights to a British superspy series. Word is that they plan to go younger and make 007 somewhere in the 30- to 40-year-old range.

Sorry, Henry Cavill, at 41, you’ve missed it by a year. But this speaks well for Aaron Taylor-Johnson, the perennial front-runner for some time, who is only 34. Barbara has always maintained that she’d carry on the family tradition in her father’s memory. So much for “My Bond is my word!”

CELEBRITY EXTRA

By Dana Jackson

Q: Who is the actor playing “Daredevil” in the new series on Disney+? What else has he been in? — E.O.

A: Charlie Cox was born in London and studied drama there before landing his first on-screen role in 2001 in the BBC series “Judge John Deed.” He followed this with the 2004 film adaptation of “The Merchant of Venice,” starring Al Pacino and Jeremy Irons. His first big American series was HBO’s “Boardwalk Empire,” where he played Owen Sleater before landing the lead role in the Netflix series “Daredevil” in 2015. It was canceled after three seasons, but Disney+ recently launched a new spin-off called “Daredevil: Born Again,” with Cox reprising his role.

Next up for Cox is the Amazon rom-com flick “Merv,” opposite Zooey Deschanel, about a couple who reunite to take their depressed dog on a vacation to Florida.

Q: I read that Jen Shah from “The Real Housewives of Salt Lake City” will be getting out of prison early. Have there been any other “Real Housewives” besides Shah and Teresa Guidice who have gone to prison? — L.S.

A: Jen Shah and Teresa Guidice (of “The Real Housewives of New Jersey”) are the only two Bravo network Housewives to serve time in federal prison, but several others have been to jail. Kim Richards, formerly of “The Real Housewives of Beverly Hills” franchise, was arrested at the Beverly Hills Hotel for public intoxication and other charges in 2015. Four months after this, she spent a night in jail for shoplifting from Target. She avoided any further jail time by going to rehab and being put on probation until 2018.

Luann de Lesseps was arrested for battery and disorderly intoxication in 2017 in Florida while she was a cast member of “The Real Housewives of New York City.” She’s famously quoted as saying to the camera: “I’ve been traveling. I’ve been to prison.” She spent one night in jail on Christmas Eve for the arrest, then went to rehab twice.

The most recent Housewife arrest and sentencing is Karen Huger of “The Real Housewives of the Potomac,” who wrecked her car and was charged with a DUI in 2024. She’s currently serving a one-year sentence at a county correctional facility in Maryland.

Q: I thought the new revival of “Frasier” had been canceled, but now I’m reading that Kelsey Grammer says it will be back. Is this true? — R.R.

A: Yes, the “Frasier” reboot was recently canceled after two seasons by Paramount+. I think the obvious reason it never caught on like the original series was that it was missing three very familiar faces: David Hyde Pierce as Niles, Jane Leeves as Daphne, and sadly the late John Mahoney as Martin.

Star Kelsey Grammer is hopeful that another streamer or network will pick it up. In fact, he’s confident that “Cheers” star Ted Danson will also co-star or at least appear on the series. It’s a lot to wish for, but if it happens, I think the viewership will follow the series to its new home.

SALOME’S STARS

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) The week promises a calmer aspect. Although there might be some lingering effects from a recent job problem, things should continue to ease up. Also expect a change in a home-based situation.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) If you feel uneasy about a colleague’s suggestion, it might be that your wise inner Taurean guide is alerting you to a potential problem. Stepping away could turn out to be the right thing to do.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) A family get-together opens up new opportunities for renewing ties. It can be especially effective in dealing with disagreements that should have been resolved but never fully were.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) You might be surprised at the response you get to a recent decision. You might be even more surprised by the reasons behind it. In any event, you’ll learn something important.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) Your aspects favor resolving any tensions left over from a recent incident.

You might want to consider having a “clear the air” talk as soon as you can. A call can lead to a change of plans.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) Avoid repeating yourself. If your first few efforts fail to connect, maybe it’s because you haven’t found the right way to get your message across. Try changing your approach.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) Good intentions plus a strong resolve to succeed can take you where you want to go. Don’t give up just because someone suggests you might be pursuing an impossible cause.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) An unexpected setback can be a blessing in disguise. Use it to recheck your facts and how you’ve presented them. Meanwhile, look for ways to expand your contacts.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) You should finally be seeing a positive change in a recent personal situation. However, an on-the-job matter might need more attention than you realized. Stay with it!

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) While you should be close to completing an important matter, you still need to maintain your focus. Things will ease up in time for weekend fun with family and friends.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) A certain matter might take an unexpected turn. Don’t simply accept it; ask for an explanation. What you learn might be helpful in shifting the situation around to your benefit.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) Projecting a positive attitude helps restore calm, even when you’re confronting some pretty stormy situations. Stay the course! The outcome will be well worth your efforts.

BORN THIS WEEK: While you enjoy tradition and stability, you also appreciate the good things that change can bring. You know how to achieve a great balance within this area of your life.

STRANGE BUT TRUE

A rainbow on Venus is called a “glory.”

LEGO bricks withstand compression better than concrete! An ordinary plastic LEGO brick can support the weight of 375,000 other bricks before it fails, which would theoretically allow you to build a tower nearing 3.5 km in height, but scaling that up to house-size bricks would prove too cost prohibitive.

Giraffes are 30 times more likely to get hit by lightning than people are.

Your brain is constantly eating itself, in a process called phagocytosis, where cells envelop and consume smaller cells or molecules to remove them from the system. Luckily, phagocytosis isn’t painful or harmful, but helps preserve gray matter.

Identical twins don’t have the same fingerprints.

The sun makes a sound in the form of pressure waves, but it’s far beyond the range of human hearing.

A comet smells like rotten eggs, urine, burning matches and almonds.

One in 18 people have a third nipple. Known as polythelia, it’s caused by a mutation in inactive genes.

Starfish don’t have bodies. Along with other echinoderms such as sea urchins and sand dollars, their entire “bodies” are technically classed as heads.

There are roughly three ginger male cats to one ginger female. The ginger gene is found on the X chromosome, meaning female cats would require two copies of the gene to become ginger while males need just one.

Patience Key in Developing Communication Skills

By Dan Rice

First loves prove to be trials by fire for most of us in our youth, being so all-consuming and oh, so awkward at the same time, but it takes even more courage to follow one's heart when social communication and interaction are already difficult, and even more so than mere shyness.

Returning Wednesday, April 2, with its third season on Netflix, the insightful docu-reality series "Love on the Spectrum" follows young people on the autism spectrum as they navigate the challenging realms of dating and relationships - some for the first time - with pure joy, nerves and the occasional discomfort. The Emmy-winning show not only helps dispel some of the stigma surrounding autism, but it also fosters empathy and compassion toward the community.

Back for another season of "Love on the Spectrum" is 26-year-old Abbey and her 30-year-old boyfriend David, both of Los Angeles. They have experienced plenty of excitement - and romance - since Season 2. "David and I are going on four years together, and we go on really fun dates," Abbey says. "We got to go to the premiere of the 'Mufasa' movie because we love lions, and I'm David's lioness."

"David is really patient with me," Abbey continues, "because sometimes my autism makes it hard for me to explain things." These small, everyday ways in which David displays his thoughtfulness about her autism make all the difference to Abbey. "He covers my ears when there's a sound I don't like," she adds.

From Santa Rosa, California, 27-year-old Madison says she joined the season three cast of "Love on the Spectrum" because she was inspired by the success of others - especially that of Abbey and David. "[Their] love story made me think finding love for people who have autism is possible," she says. Madison is "looking for someone who shares common interests and values" and who is "conversational and fun to be around."

Known for her vibrant personality and sharp comic timing, 29-year-old Dani of Los Angeles has kept quite busy since Season 2. "Ever tried juggling? Now imagine juggling an animation studio, travel to events around the country, social media and a personal life - all at once!" she gushes. "My company, Dani-Mation, keeps me on my toes as we empower people on the autism spectrum to turn their love for animation into careers, while also producing our own in-house and outsourcing animation."

Dani says "Love on the Spectrum" has taught her a lot about dating, particularly when it comes to her admittedly narrow perspective on what she was looking for in past partners. "I've learned that love isn't where you meet 'the one' and live happily ever after," she acknowledges. "For most of us, it's way more complicated, and way more real."

As for 25-year-old Tanner of Clemson, South Carolina, life since Season 2 has been all about public speaking engagements and creating social media content - all while enthusiastically maintaining his work schedule and moving to a new apartment. Embracing life to the fullest is a lesson he gratefully took away from his time on the show. "I learned that if you are brave and take a chance on something new and different, you will learn a lot and become a better person," he shares.

When it comes to his dating life, "There are some very lovely ladies in my life!" Tanner reveals. "That's all I'll say for now!" Tanner has been looking forward to Season 3, eager for people to see his recent growth and maturity. "I want people to know that autistic people are not always stuck being the same way," he says. "We grow and change just like everyone else."

Neurodiversity expert Jennifer Cook returns as the dating coach for young individuals on the autism spectrum who are exploring the realms of romance and relationships on Season 3 of the docu-reality series "Love on the Spectrum," premiering Wednesday, April 2, on Netflix.

Also returning to "Love on the Spectrum" this season is neurodiversity expert Jennifer Cook, who helps guide the daters on their journeys. Cook says her approach depends on the personal history of the romantic hopefuls. In other words, her guidance for the newcomers on the show will vary from that for those who have a bit more experience under their belts. "With new daters, we concentrate on strengthening communication skills - creating reciprocity in conversation, active listening, and asking questions that show your interest," Cook elaborates. "But [as] folks move beyond the basics, it becomes more important to find some joy in learning what you bring to the table and not shying away from that."

Regardless of their level of dating experience, Cook allows that working through feelings that come in real time can be difficult. She advises all her clients to "listen for that small voice within." And, for everyone she works with, there's one skill that's of the utmost importance to learn. "Patience! With others, with themselves, with love in general," Cook continues. "I know it's hard to wait for that special someone. We all want to feel important right now. But given a little time and space to grow naturally, healthy communication develops and chemistry sizzles. Learning to let go of the need to control, to orchestrate what love will look and sound like, is a bit scary... oh, but it's worth it."

parents and grandmother, the two will learn about each other's previously separate lives, blended identity, vibrant culture and the importance of family.

“Wylde Pak” stars Nikki Castillo (“K.C. Undercover”) as the voice of Lily Pak, a competitive and fun-loving 11-year-old, and Benjamin Plessala (“SpongeBob: Sponge on the Run”) as Jack Wylde, Lily’s 13-year-old adventurous half-brother who just came into town for the summer. Additional voices include Ben Pronsky (“The Loud House”) as William Wylde, Jack and Lily’s fun-loving dad; Jee Young Han (“Unprisoned”) as the voice of Min-Ju Pak, Lily’s energetic mom and Jack’s stepmom; and Jean Yoon (“Kim’s Convenience”) as the voice of Halmoni, Min’s unpredictable mom and Lily and Jack’s caring yet stubborn grandma.

CBS has announced a straight-to-series order for “Boston Blue” (working title), a new drama starring Donnie Wahlberg, for the 2025-2026 broadcast season. In “Boston Blue,” a universe expansion of the long-running top drama “Blue Bloods,” Wahlberg will reprise his role as NYPD officer Danny Reagan as he takes a position with Boston PD. Once in Boston, Danny is paired with Detective Lena Peters, the eldest daughter of a prominent law enforcement family.

Apple TV+ has announced “Kpopped,” an all-new eight-episode song battle series from executive producer Lionel Richie, starring PSY, the international chart-topper who helped bring K-pop to the world with his global sensation “Gangnam Style,” and three-time Grammy award-winning superstar and executive producer Megan Thee Stallion, who also performs her hit song “Savage.” In each episode of “Kpopped,” Western icons reimagine one of their biggest hits, collaborating with top-tier K-pop idols to deliver spectacular battle performances, with a live Seoul-based audience picking the winner of the best new K-popped song.

COUCH THEATER

By Demi Taveras

“The Residence” (TV-MA) – This whodunnit series hails from the production company Shondaland, which is run by television guru Shonda Rhimes (“Scandal,” “How to Get Away with Murder,” and many more). Led by the charming Uzo Aduba (“Orange Is the New Black”), the eight-episode show follows detective Cordelia Cupp as she’s tasked with a murder that occurred during a state dinner in the White House. With the victim being the White House Chief Usher A.B. Wynter (Giancarlo Esposito), Cordelia must inspect 157 suspects, investigate about 132 rooms, and keep the White House from falling into complete disarray. Sounds easy enough, right? All eight episodes premiere March 20. (Netflix)

“Good American Family” (TV-MA) – This limited drama series has two heavy hitters in television – Ellen Pompeo of “Grey’s Anatomy” fame and Mark Duplass from shows like “The Mindy Project” and “The Morning Show.” The two leads were great picks to take on the controversial subject matter in this story. A dramatized version of Natalia Grace’s real life, this series follows 7-year-old Natalia (Imogen Faith Reid), a girl with dwarfism who gets adopted by Michael and Kristine Barnett. As the Barnetts welcome her into their family, they notice certain oddities with her, which lead them to think that she isn’t actually a young girl but a full-fledged adult pretending to be a child, à la “Orphan” (2009). The first two episodes will be released on March 19. (Hulu)

“Happy Face” (TV-MA) – This true-crime drama series was adapted from Melissa Moore’s real-life story as the daughter of the “Happy Face” killer Keith Hunter Jespersen. Using excerpts from her podcast of the same name, as well as her autobiography “Shattered Silence,” this eight-episode series recounts how Melissa (played by Annaleigh Ashford) is forced to reconnect with her serial killer father who is in jail for his heinous crimes. Ready to go public about the reasons behind his crimes, Happy Face claims that he will only speak to Melissa about the crimes he committed. But Melissa must be careful not to let his wickedness and their bond as father and daughter eclipse her judgment. Dennis Quaid, who’s been thriving in villainous roles lately, stars as the Happy Face killer in this series premiering March 20. (Paramount+)

Edwina Findley and Uzo Aduba star in “The Residence.”

Rich in Flavor, Light on the Wallet: Meet Mujadara

Are you ready for a culinary journey to the Middle East? Buckle up, buttercup, and bring your taste buds, because today, we’re making Mujadara (moo-zha-DAH-rah), a simple, satisfying dish of lentils, rice and caramelized onions that prove frugal can also be fabulous.

Mujadara has been enjoyed across Lebanon, Jordan and Syria for centuries, and for good reason. It’s hearty, flavorful and budget-friendly. Traditionally known as a “poor man’s meal,” don’t let the name fool you – as with most “peasant food,” this dish is so comforting and delicious, it’ll make you feel like royalty. Think of it as the Middle Eastern equivalent of mac and cheese: cozy, familiar and always a hit.

At its core, Mujadara is a lesson in culinary alchemy. A handful of pantry staples – lentils, rice, onions and spices – transform into something far greater than the sum of their parts. The secret? Those deeply caramelized onions. They add a richness that takes this humble dish to the next level.

For this version, I’ve opted for brown rice over white to boost the nutritional value, though white basmati works too. Just check the recipe notes for adjustments. The lentils provide protein, the rice offers fiber, and the onions bring an irresistible depth of flavor and sweetness that ties it all together.

Mujadara is best served with a dollop of yogurt or a drizzle of tahini sauce, a scattering of fresh herbs and, if you like a bit of heat, a spoonful of your favorite spicy sauce. You can enjoy it hot, warm or at room temperature, making it an excellent make-ahead meal.

Mujadara (Lentils and Rice with Caramelized Onions)

Yield: 4 generous servings

Total Time: 45 minutes

4 cloves garlic, chopped

2 bay leaves

1 tablespoon ground cumin

2 teaspoons Kosher salt, divided

1/2 teaspoon black pepper

5 cups water

1 cup brown basmati rice, rinsed and drained

1 cup brown or green lentils, rinsed and drained

1/3 cup extra-virgin olive oil

2 large yellow onions, thinly sliced

1/2 cup sliced green onions, divided

1/2 cup chopped fresh cilantro or parsley, divided

Plain yogurt, for serving (or tahini sauce for a vegan option)

In a large saucepan, combine garlic, bay leaves, cumin, 1 1/2 teaspoons salt and black pepper with water. Bring to boiling over medium-high heat.

Stir in the rice, reduce heat to medium-low, cover and simmer for 10 minutes.

After 10 minutes, add lentils and stir. Return to a simmer, cover and cook until liquid is absorbed and grains are tender (about 20-23 minutes).

Meanwhile, heat olive oil in a large skillet over medium heat. Add onions and cook, stirring occasionally, until deeply caramelized and crisp at the edges (about 20-30 minutes). Transfer to a paper towel-lined plate and sprinkle with remaining salt.

When the lentils and rice are done, drain excess water if needed, remove bay leaves and mash garlic cloves against the pot’s side. Add 3/4 of the green onions and cilantro, fluff with a fork and adjust seasoning.

Transfer to a serving dish, top with caramelized onions and garnish with remaining green onions and herbs. Serve with yogurt or tahini sauce.

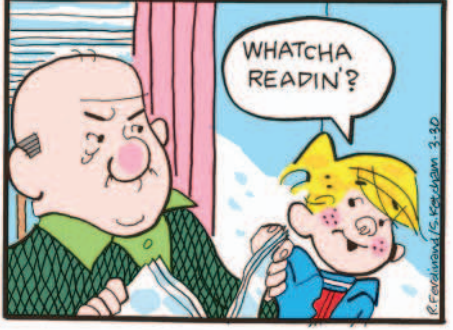

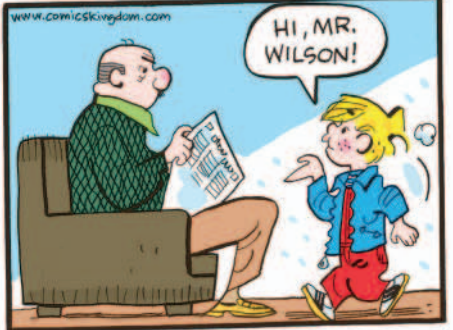

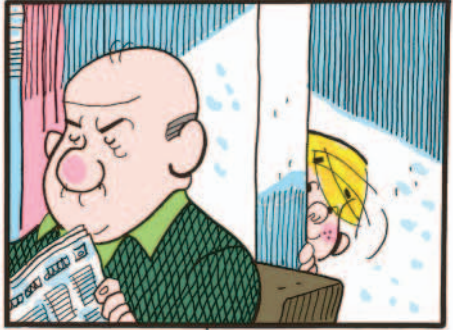

Diva Tips - Rice Swap: If you use white basmati rice, cook the lentils first for 10 minutes before adding the rice to ensure both cook evenly.

Whether you’re looking for a nutritious meatless meal or just want to expand your global recipe repertoire, Mujadara is a must-try. Simple, satisfying and steeped in tradition, it’s proof that the best meals don’t have to be complicated – or expensive.

JUNTA LETS IN FOREIGN RESCUERS

Death toll passes 1,600 in country torn by civil war

REUTERS

BANGKOK – Myanmar’s military rulers let in hundreds of foreign rescue personnel on Saturday after an earthquake killed more than 1,600 people, the deadliest natural disaster to hit the impoverished, war-torn country in years.

Friday’s 7.7 magnitude quake, among the biggest to jolt the Southeast Asian nation in the last century, crippled airports, bridges and highways amid a civil war that has wrecked the economy and displaced millions.

The death toll in Myanmar climbed to 1,644, the military government said on Saturday, according to BBC Burmese news service.

In neighboring Thailand, where the quake rattled buildings and brought down a skyscraper under construction in the capital, Bangkok, at least nine people were killed.

Survivors in Mandalay, Myanmar’s second-biggest city, dug with their bare hands on Friday in desperate attempts to save those still trapped, lacking heavy machinery and with authorities absent.

In Bangkok on Saturday, rescue operations continued at the site of the 33-story tower’s collapse, where 47 people were missing or trapped under the rubble – including workers from Myanmar.

The U.S. Geological Service’s predictive modeling estimated Myanmar’s death toll could exceed 10,000 and losses could exceed the country’s annual economic output.

and Culture’s distinctive shape inspired by African motifs in the background.

The vendor, who declined to give his last name, said he saw President Donald Trump’s recent executive order aimed at restricting programming he deemed anti-American at federally funded museums and cultural institutions as an attack on the American value of respect for diverse opinions.

“We are a diverse country – made of all races, all cultures and they’re trying to take it away,” Ernest said.

No sign Trump will honor past deal

Canada, Mexico won auto protections in 2018

David Lawder and David Shepardson

Canada and Mexico won protections against potential new U.S. auto tariffs in 2018 as part of the U.S.-Mexico-Canada Agreement on trade, but there is no evidence that President Donald Trump will honor those commitments as he imposes 25% duties on global automotive imports.

The side letters to the USMCA trade deal agreed to by Trump’s first administration granted both Mexico and Canada a 60-day delay on the imposition of any global auto tariffs as a result of his first-term Section 232 national security investigation into auto imports.

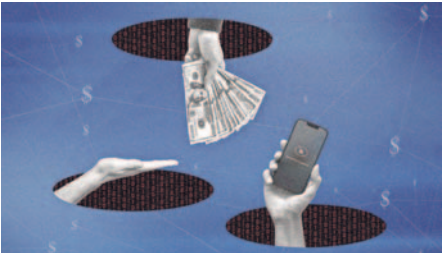

Once that North America-only grace period expired, Canada and Mexico would each get an annual duty-free import quota of 2.6 million passenger vehicles and an unlimited number of light truck imports.

The letters, signed by Trump’s former U.S. Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer, also granted Mexico a duty-free quota on annual parts imports valued at $108 billion and Canada a $34.2 billion parts quota. The agreements further stipulate that even for automotive products that are non-compliant with USMCA rules of origin, the Section 232 tariffs cannot exceed the tariff rate in effect on August 1, 2018, for the two countries – effectively 2.5%.

If upheld, this would provide relief to some automakers that had been shipping Mexican-built cars to the U.S. at that tariff rate, including BMW. Trump revived the 2019 Section 232 investigation findings to impose the 25% tariffs that take effect on April 3, but White House officials made no mention of the 2018 USMCA side-letter promises, subjecting Mexican and Canadian-built vehicles to immediate 25% tariffs.

Instead, they said the only carve-out for Mexico and Canada was to deduct the value of any U.S. content from the 25% tariffs on U.S. vehicles and parts. Auto parts imports from Canada and Mexico will remain on a duty-free basis until the Commerce Department establishes a process for determining U.S. content value, with no specified deadline. A separate issue is whether the deadline for the Section 232 auto

USA TODAY INVESTIGATION

Sextortion and cost of recovery services

Tech company taking advantage of victims, some clients say

USA TODAY

The 44-year-old man was caught in a shakedown. Smack in the middle of the pharmacy.

He already bought four $250 eBay gift cards, but his scammer demanded more. He walked back to CVS to purchase four more, bringing his total to $2,000.

The blackmailer was waiting. If the man didn't pay up, the scammer, known as a sextortionist, promised to release his nude images to his family, friends and government job.

But each time he paid, the predator, who had pretended to be someone else on a dating app, increased the ransom.

Desperate for a way out, he was relieved when a Google search brought him to the site of Digital Forensics Corporation (DFC). The Ohio-based company said they could try to get the explicit photos deleted, but it would cost $3,000. He says they asked for half the money up front via credit card and that he send a physical check for the rest. It seemed strange to him, but he complied.

If his experience reads like it's full of red flags, he says he knows. He sees them now. But in the moment, he was so distressed he overlooked his reservations about DFC.

Financial sextortion is the fastest-growing cybercrime targeting children and young men in North America, and DFC is among the best-known for-profit players trying to help victims. But a USA TODAY investigation, based on business filings, lawsuits, internal company documents and more than 100 complaints to state regulators and the Better Business Bureau, shows a pattern of customers claiming they received inflated promises and high prices.

The company rejects that, saying it has received thousands of positive reviews. However, some former clients say the company underdelivers and uses scare tactics and manipulation to garner clients, the investigation found.

USA TODAY interviewed nearly three dozen customers and reviewed 11 contracts outlining the services. Three former and three current employees from the company provided information for this report.

Among the allegations:

- DFC aggressively markets their service to recoup sensitive personal information online taken by sextortionists, but then in contracts insists that it makes “no guarantee of outcome or results.”
- DFC uses an escalating sales pitch known as “Phase I” and “Phase II” that works as a hook to get customers to buy more services.
- The company charges thousands of dollars even in cases when it can't stop blackmailers from contacting customers. It offers monthly installment financing that can span six years and charge up to 18% interest.
- If customers miss payments, DFC has an in-house collections department that in one instance called a customer 35 times in four months after he had already declared bankruptcy.
- The company anticipates complaints from consumers – discouraging them from posting negative reviews, writing warnings into their contracts and goes so far as to threaten legal action for “defamatory, confidential, or misleading reviews.”

Jeromy Simonovic, in-house counsel for DFC, says the company works diligently to address consumer complaints. He says that a majority of the 1,000 customers per month signing up for their service leave satisfied and that those who don't come to them already emotionally harmed by scammers.

In a statement, Simonovic said DFC's customer agreement “reflects transparency and honesty in stating that we cannot guarantee outcomes for online investigations because there are factors outside DFC's control. That is to say, DFC engages with a blackmailer with unknown motives and unpredictable habits. Please keep in mind that identifying cyber criminals in third world countries is not a perfect science.”

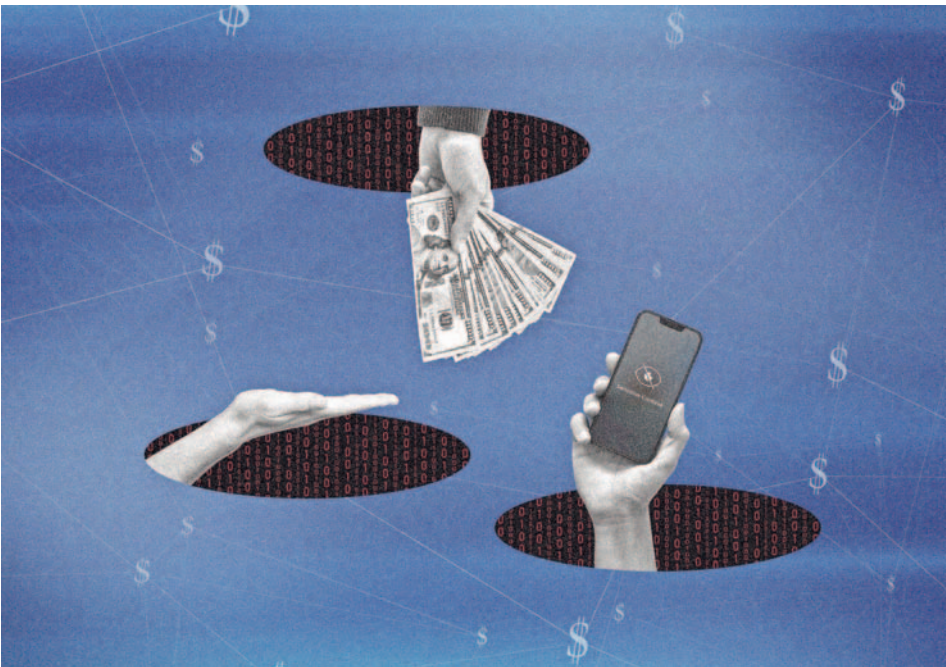

Simonovic defended the role of sales staffers telling horror stories to potential customers and says blackmailers are beginning to fear the Ohio-based company.

“We find ourselves more in an explanatory situation where we're emphasizing the consequences these sextortion scams can present,” Simonovic says. “We've identified and found blackmailers and we rely on our track record.

Digital Forensics Corporation says it can help sextortion victims, but former clients say they paid hefty fees yet the company didn't fix their problems.

ABOUT THIS SERIES

This article is part of an ongoing USA TODAY series investigating a surge in financial sextortion and its mental health impact on teenage boys.

We're transparent about the harm we've seen."

In April 2023, the FBI warned against the use of for-profit companies offering sextortion victims “assistance” services, which often come at exorbitant fees. The FBI did not name any company, but instead encouraged victims to work with law enforcement and non-profit agencies who will provide assistance for free.

“We do not work with any of these for-profit companies,” says Mike Prado, of the Department of Homeland Security's Cyber Crimes Center. “We do not coordinate with them, we do not endorse them, and we strongly urge victims to not cooperate with them or seek them out.”

Simonovic provided internal feedback from more than 2,700 customers since January 2024 he says were pleased with the service and provided contact information for 51 of them.

USA TODAY contacted each of those customers who ranged from students to retirees and janitors to grocery store baggers nationwide. Many say they found relief with DFC but acknowledged it came with hefty price tags. A Canadian father says he spent $20,000 on the service.

Nearly all the customers said they purchased DFC's additional monitoring service, but few said that the company obtained proof that stolen content had been deleted.

A business owner in Indiana said he found dozens of negative reviews for DFC, but went ahead with their services in addition to reporting his sextortion situation to the FBI and local police, who didn't promptly provide any relief.

He paid his scammer $1,000 in an attempt to prevent hacked company emails and false allegations of pedophilia from spilling into the public. When the scammer demanded more he turned to DFC's full suite of monitoring for $10,000.

“I get all the criticism and I tried to be an educated consumer, but where else do you go?” the 55-year-old man says. “I can stop responding and hope they go away, or I can gamble with this company. Whether it's all BS or not the company stayed in contact with me and at the end of the day the bad actor has gone away.”

Another client, 70, says he wasn't aware there are free services available from law enforcement and nonprofit groups for sextortion help that may be as effective.

“If I knew about it, I probably would have done that before Digital Forensics Corporation, but I asked DFC if I should go to the police and they said, ‘Don't worry, you'll be taken care of,’ ” he says.

In response to claims clients are dissuaded from contacting the FBI or police, DFC told USA TODAY their company never informs clients to avoid contacting the police or law enforcement.

“It's contrary to DFC policy,” Simonovic wrote in an email.

Internal documents show methods for high-pressure sales tactics

Sextortion victims who spoke with USA TODAY say they called DFC's sextortion helpline in heightened emotional states seeking help. But they say the term “helpline” is misleading. A call script and other internal documents obtained by USA TODAY outlined how DFC quickly guides the conversation toward their sales pitch.

When one Georgia-based victim called DFC for sextortion help, he was suicidal and unable to sleep or eat.

“I was shaking the whole time on the call,” says another Virginia-based victim who was 19 when he was sextorted. “All that was on my mind was getting this scammer off of me.”

DFC reassured him they could help, but the victim says not before scaring him that his predators might create a website revealing his explicit nude content.

“If you aren't in contact with the suspect we would not be able to help, it's vital to respond to them if possible so that we can perform the investigation,” a DFC salesperson told the man, who was 19 at the time, quoting from a DFC call script. “If they think you are ignoring them they could start releasing your information to get your attention. Can you get back in contact with the suspect?”

In order to track down where a blackmailer is located, DFC uses a client's social media logins and messages the blackmailer on the client's behalf. The company entices the criminal to click on a tracking link, which provides information about their location. DFC then creates a letter threatening the perpetrator to end their attack. Packages are offered on a sliding scale that starts at $1,499.

DFC's Simonovic says that the company's pricing is transparent and that whether to proceed is up to the individual. “DFC's strategies and mechanisms are provided to clients, who may or may not elect to proceed with services,” he said in a statement.

Attorneys for DFC also characterized the scripts provided to USA TODAY as “stolen” and warned that they had “not been verified or authenticated by DFC.”

The script instructs the salesperson to ask questions about the victim's relationship and employment status and involvement in activities and professional groups, information that ex-clients say scared them by suggesting they could lose retirement funds or suffer a divorce.

“Ask more probing questions based on what client has already told you, especially if they give you info that their marriage might be on the rocks, if infidelity has been an issue before, or if they have young kids that would mean a custody battle,” the internal call script advises.

One 28-year-old man in Ohio says DFC told him if he didn't use their service, his blackmailer would release everything. He made a $400 down payment that same night.

The 44-year-old was supposed to receive his results within 24 hours, but DFC didn't send the password to access the file, insisting that a company representative needed to discuss the findings on the phone – a tactic other customers say they encountered, too. DFC utilized the phone call, they say, as a sales pitch, recommending these clients upgrade from their “Phase I” to “Phase II” plan, which provides surveillance of the victim's accounts to prevent leaks.

Per the script, the company representative is advised to tell clients that their passwords and everything stored on their account is likely for sale on the dark web – and that the criminals might also sell stolen credit card info or Social Security numbers.

In other instances, former clients say DFC told them that criminals are known to photoshop underage girls next to the naked images or that previous clients who declined upgrading to a Phase II plan had their explicit content released by their sextortionist a year later.

DFC says it “feels obligated to inform client of potential possible outcomes and how their sensitive data may be used to pressure them into paying perpetrators.”

Other internal documents focused on damage control.

A script outlines what to do if a client mentions BBB reviews and advises the salesperson to tell clients: “When we do a real investigation and give them an honest report that tells them they are wrong they react emotionally and they sometimes get mad and take it out on us.” It advises the salesperson to direct clients to other review sites like TrustPilot.com and ResellerRatings .com.

A trail of complaints

Ohio's Better Business Bureau issued two warning alerts on its website about Digital Forensics, which it says is not BBB accredited. The nonprofit consumer protection group says in the past, DFC has requested consumers remove their reviews as a condition of resolving their complaints with refunds. A new Federal Trade Commission rule that began in October 2024 now prohibits that practice.

In addition, BBB says it has been unable to authenticate many positive and negative reviews left on its site about the business and has removed them.

BBB has fielded 92 complaints about their services in the past three years. The organization claims the company routinely misrepresents the type of evidence, email and photos that would be provided when consumers paid additional money for “Phase II” reporting.

The National Center for Missing and Exploited Children also received more than two dozen reports related to DFC through their CyberTipline.

In 2023, the largest online sextortion support forum, r/sextortion on Reddit, blacklisted DFC and banned any recommendations of DFC after the moderator said that they were using “predatory sales tactics” when talking with victims from the subreddit. DFC questioned whether Reddit posters had actually used its services and said the forum refused to allow it a chance to rebut criticisms. DFC says its positive ratings from clients and employees outweigh the negative across multiple rating sites.

In a 2021 YouTube video, DFC touts an appearance on the “Dr. Phil” television show as evidence of its expertise. But subsequent videos show DFC has recycled its “Dr. Phil” appearance in marketing materials and edited the clip to swap out an ex-DFC staff member

They sought help - then things got worse

Some victims say recovery services add to costly losses

USA TODAY

One college student remembers the exact moment he realized he'd been scammed. The 24 hours that followed happened in slow motion. He can recall pieces: pulling into a gas station as the panic set in, texting a friend that he wouldn't make it to their freshman-year geology class.

He was 19 at the time, and the girl he had been texting – the one to whom he had sent nude photos – was actually a predator who was now blackmailing him, threatening to release the pictures to his family and friends.

He frantically Googled “sextortion help” and came across a company that purported it could get the images taken down. He signed up, agreeing to pay $1,500 for the service. But he says the company, Digital Forensics Corporation (DFC), didn't deliver. DFC maintains sextortion help is a legitimate, successful area of its business, though a USA TODAY investigation has found more than 100 complaints that the company aggressively markets its services to victims in a fragile mental state.

This man's story isn't an uncommon tale, legal and sextortion experts say. As the crime of sextortion grows in the U.S., so does the prevalence of individuals or companies that charge a fee to retrieve intimate messages or photos and then may fail to do so. It's such a prevalent secondary problem that the FBI has issued a warning about it, calling some assistance services “scams” and urging the public to avoid them. The FBI did not name any company but instead encouraged victims to work with law enforcement and nonprofit agencies that offer free assistance.

The mental health implications of being scammed, then taken advantage of again, can be grave – especially for young men, who are most frequently preyed upon. Ninety percent of financial sextortion victims are teenage boys.

The man, who like others we spoke to requested we not print his name out of fear his blackmailers may find him, says his experience with his predator paled in comparison to what happened when he tried to fix the problem.

“They are far worse (than the sextortionists). They are far worse,” he says. “I don't think that anybody could have gotten that amount of money out of me for any object or product if I wasn't in that state of mind, and they knew that.”

Sextortion support groups are plagued by recovery scammers

When one Georgia man was sextorted when he was 18, he turned to the largest online support forum for sextortion survivors, r/sextortion on Reddit, for advice. Recovery scammers quickly flooded his inbox – users claiming they could hack into the predators' accounts to delete the explicit content for an upfront fee of $150.

He didn't follow through with their services, but the messages only added to his emotional distress. He wasn't sleeping and could barely eat, and he contemplated suicide in the days after he was sextorted.

Recovery scammers often pop up on sextortion victim support forums and YouTube channels. Jessica Smith, president and founder of ClickSafe Intelligence, a nonprofit company focused on countering child exploitation, says recovery scammers comment on her YouTube sextortion-related videos every one to two weeks.

In some cases, cybersecurity experts say, recovery scammers may be part of the same group of organized criminals who preyed on the teens in the first place.

Part of the problem is that even when they're blocked, scammers can create new accounts on social media platforms in a matter of minutes. Smith says she has seen recovery scam accounts that use the same profile picture across four accounts or have only one numerical difference in their usernames.

On Reddit, the r/sextortion group sends an automated message to new posters: “Beware of recovery scammers ... These parasites will try to convince you that they can 'hack' the scammer and remove your files from their devices. It's a scam.”

The thread's main moderator says the group was “completely overrun by recovery scammers” when he took over in April 2021. He says the group has banned thousands of users in the past two years, but even a banned user can send private messages.

Getting rid of recovery scammers on these platforms is akin to a game of whack-a-mole. For every comment someone posts, there might be three or four recovery scammers who send direct messages.

“The victims, they're in such a panic state that they're willing to do anything to get out of it,” says the moderator, who requested we not print his name because of his own experience with sextortion.

Claims of scare tactics, preying on victims and manipulation

Scammers have no intention of helping the victims. But there are also for-profit companies like DFC that purport they may be able to get victims' explicit images deleted for a price – but even then it's a nearly impossible task that experts say is unlikely without access to the predator's physical device or logins.

It's something for which the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children has created a free service – Take It Down, which is listed by the FBI as a resource – but even so, the service extends only to taking images off social media platforms, not private text messaging platforms.

It works by assigning a digital fingerprint called a hash value to a reported sexually explicit photo or video from a minor. The hash values allow platforms to remove the content, without the original image or video ever being viewed. Once the service provides the hash values, participating social media companies take it from there.

Victims over 18 can use StopNCII.org, a similar free platform, to work to remove images.

Those who purport to be able to do more may be overpromising their services and taking advantage of victims' desperation and fear, says Mike Prado at the Department of Homeland Security's Cyber Crimes Center.

A 25-year-old from Texas says he called DFC's hotline sobbing two years ago after he was sextorted. He had already complied with his blackmailer's demands to send $500 – everything in his bank account – but the predator came back asking for more.

He says the DFC representative told him criminals are known to photoshop underage girls next to the naked images they receive before sending them out.

The man had just started a job and was looking forward to being able to financially support his 1-year-old daughter. He says DFC told him he would likely lose his position if the materials were released.

DFC says it “feels obligated to inform client of potential possible outcomes and how their sensitive data may be used to pressure them into paying perpetrators.”

The 25-year-old says, “The way they made this situation look was that the (sextortionist) held all the cards to my future. They took advantage of a really bad situation.”

He signed up for a $7,840 expedited “Phase I” plan from the company, using a loan from his parents.

The service, in the best-case scenario, was supposed to result in confirmation the criminal deleted his private information from their devices. DFC took over the logins of his social platforms and communicated on his behalf to pressure the scammer. They sent a tracking link, which located the predator in Nigeria.

When the blackmailers didn't comply with DFC's demands to delete the photos, the Texas man says a representative contacted him and told him that though the company says it's successful 90% of the time, he was in the unlucky 10% and had a particularly skilled sextortionist. The only way to remain safe would be to purchase DFC's “Phase II” plan, which provides continual internet surveillance on plans between six and 18 months.

“I really didn't feel like they did anything they had promised,” he says, adding he didn't move forward with purchasing another plan. “I could have accepted this a week earlier and just blocked (the blackmailer) and just accepted the outcome for what it was going to be.”

Others USA TODAY spoke with told nearly identical stories.

One 27-year-old says he was pressured to sign up for a Phase II plan. He says a DFC representative told him that in the past, scammers had released clients' content a year after sextortion.

Experts say that if a predator is going to send out images, it will typically happen within two weeks of contact. Once the images are sent out, the blackmailer loses their leverage and usually moves on, according to Lauren Coffren, executive director of the Exploited Children Division at the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children (NCMEC).

Jeromy Simonovic, in-house counsel for DFC, said a majority of the 1,000 customers a month who sign up for the service leave satisfied. He provided internal feedback from more than 2,700 customers since January 2024 and provided contact information for clients he said were pleased with the service.

In total, USA TODAY spoke with nearly three dozen customers, many of whom came from DFC's list. But even among those satisfied customers, many complained about the high prices of the plans, and several said they would have used a free service, like the StopNCII.org, had they known it was an option. All the customers on DFC's list paid for Phase II plans; some said they most appreciated DFC's rapid response to the situation.

“I don't blame (DFC). They weren't guaranteeing they would be 100% successful,” said one 24-year-old in Texas who said a cybercriminal was bluffing about releasing his nude photos. “I just wanted him to leave me alone. Everything else was secondary.”

In a statement, Simonovic added “we cannot guarantee outcomes for online deletion of our client's private and privileged information.”

Sextortion victims who spoke to USA TODAY also said DFC told them law enforcement is overwhelmed and dissuaded victims from taking their cases to police, contrary to the FBI's protocol.

Cybersecurity experts say blocking and ignoring scammers is the best thing to do – and that getting back in touch pretending to send money could anger them. Furthermore, DFC's tactics to send predators cease and desist orders may momentarily alleviate victims' anxiety, but they aren't legally enforceable, according to the FBI.

Instead, underage victims can use the National Center for Missing and Ex-investigations because there are factors outside DFC's control. That is to say, DFC engages with a blackmailer with unknown motives and unpredictable habits. Please keep in mind that identifying cybercriminals in third world countries is not a perfect science.”

Young adults are ‘desperate to get that imagery back’

Psychologically, victims of sextortion scams are more likely to be vulnerable – especially if they're young adults.

“These young adults and teenagers are so desperate to get that imagery back that after they experienced sextortion, there's a very high likelihood that they are going to fall for a recovery scam,” says Smith, who runs ClickSafe.

Because the human brain doesn't finish developing until about age 25, young people respond to stress and decision-making differently from adults, which affects their ability to navigate these situations.

Victims may develop anxiety, depression and post-traumatic stress disorder and are more prone to future experiences of online abuse.

The man who was sextorted during his freshman year of college says the experience impacted his ability to pursue healthy romantic interactions. It took four years for him to enter a relationship.

“I came from a small town and I didn't really talk to a whole lot of girls, and then you get attention from something like that and it just turns into the darkest moment of your life,” he says.

The 25-year-old from Texas says he vomited frequently, had panic attacks and relapsed into substance abuse in the week that followed his sextortion and interactions with DFC. He had overdosed on methamphetamine in the past but says the fallout over his sextortion was the scariest period of his life.

What to do if you're facing sextortion

In April 2023, the FBI issued a warning about possible “assistance scams”: “These companies charge exorbitant fees, whereas law enforcement and non-profit agencies will provide assistance at no charge to victims.” The FBI did not name any company.

Victims of sextortion can work to remove the images from the internet through NCMEC's Take It Down service or StopNCII.org if they are over 18.

“There is danger that is inherent in turning over additional data to companies that may be unscrupulous, not fully vetted and are operating on behalf of a victim for profit,” says Prado at the Department of Homeland Security's Cyber Crimes Center. “We do not work with any of these for-profit companies.”

The bottom line? You shouldn't have to pay for help, cybersecurity experts say.

Victims should block the predator and report the account on its platform and the abuse to authorities at report.cybertip.org, tips.fbi.gov/home or the Know2Protect Tipline at 833-591-5669. Ask for help from a trusted adult, like a relative, teacher, coach, counselor, mentor or someone in a religious organization. Parents and communities should validate victims' experiences – remember, the criminal is the only one at fault – and work to learn the signs of sextortion and how to prevent it to educate others.

If you need immediate mental health help, you can call or text the 988 suicide hotline.

exploited Children's free service, Take It Down, to get private content removed from social media. If victims are over 18, they can go to StopNCII.org, which is also free. DFC says it does not provide services for minor victims unless their parents are working with the company and refers other minors to the police and NCMEC.

The 44-year-old who signed the $3,000 Phase I DFC contract says he filed a complaint to his state's attorney general office, who wrote back to set up a call. But he decided he didn't want to go through the emotional turmoil of talking about his sextortion again, and dropped the complaint. He feels shame both over his sextortion experience and the thousands he paid DFC.

“If these (nude photos) get out, not only are there some embarrassing things about your sex life that you don't really want being shared with relatives and colleagues, but also do you want it getting out that you were stupid and fell for this?”

Trying to do the impossible

DFC claims it will try to get proof its clients' nude images are completely deleted, a task that cybersecurity experts say is nearly impossible without access to the scammer's physical device. Those who purport to be able to do more are overpromising their services, experts say.

Victims of fraud and blackmail face few good options, says John Breyault, vice president of the National Consumers League, who expressed concern about Digital Forensics' tactics.

“There is no silver bullet out there to get images taken down from the entire Internet,” Breyault says.

DFC's advice for scam victims often runs counter to best practices preached by experts. For example, the company recommends victims get back in touch with their scammer in order for DFC to send a tracking link.

“If they think you are ignoring them they could start releasing your information to get your attention,” one line in the DFC sales script reads. “This will piss them off and they will release the pictures/videos.”

DFC responded that “in some cases that blocking cyber criminal blackmailer only infuriates and entices them to post the Client's private data because it means they will not be getting paid akin to ‘what is left to lose’ mindset.”

It defended the use of tracking links, but said “there are many other proprietary methods that can reveal the exact geo location and true identity of (the) perpetrator, as well as provide proof of deletion of our client's private and privileged information.”

Sextortion victims who spoke to USA TODAY also said DFC told them law enforcement is overwhelmed and dissuaded victims from taking their cases to police, contrary to the FBI's protocol.

Brazil gets creative to host COP30

Worries raised over lack of accommodation, costs

Manuela Andreoni and Lisandra Paraguassu

BELEM, Brazil – Environmental activists from around the globe have eagerly awaited Brazil’s turn hosting the United Nations climate summit, known as COP30, after three years where the conference of world leaders tackling global warming was held in countries without full freedom for public demonstrations.

But the so-called “People’s COP” may not be as welcoming as they hoped. Sky-high accommodation costs are threatening Brazil’s stated goal of inclusion, and the government is racing to multiply the 18,000 beds now available in the Amazonian host city of Belem, turning to motels aimed at amorous couples, ferries that normally ply the rivers and school classrooms to host visitors.

President Luiz Inacio Lula da Silva has said his goal in bringing COP30 to the Amazon was to focus the world’s attention on a forest that both offers unique solutions to climate change, by locking away planet-warming carbon, and suffers some of its gravest consequences, in the form of wildfires and drought.

While many climate change campaigners have celebrated that focus, some have also expressed fears that hosting such a major event may strain the fragile region and compromise the success of the conference. Belem, a port city of 1.3 million on the edge of the Amazon rainforest, is speckled with construction sites. The Brazilian government is pouring some $1 billion into new infrastructure.

But much work remains to accommodate an expected 60,000-plus visitors.

Two global advocacy groups who declined to be named told Reuters that scouts they hired had found accommodation prices for the November conference were several times higher than what they paid last year in Baku, Azerbaijan. Even the cheapest rooms are going for $400, and they are averaging around $1,500 a night.

Lula shrugged off the hotel crunch in a recent visit to Belem, suggesting those who cannot find accommodation should sleep “looking at the sky – it will be wonderful.”

At the heart of the problem is a question that has become more acute as the annual COP has grown from a gathering of world leaders and diplomats to a sprawling conference mixing activists, businesses and government officials: Who is the U.N. climate summit really for?

“It feels like a mundane thing, but it’s actually politically very important,” said Tasneem Essop, executive director of the Climate Action Network. “The ability to address the accommodation problems can make or break a COP.”

Civil society groups say their access is key to keeping pressure on negotiators, citing the role of public advocacy in breakthroughs such as the creation of the Loss and Damage Fund in 2022 to channel resources from wealthy nations to address destruction caused by climate change in poorer countries.

“Everybody’s been waiting for the Brazil COP,” Essop said. “For civil society, it is that point where once again we’re going to be at the COP with space for our actions.”

The Brazilian government is racing to multiply the 18,000 beds now available in Belem in time for the November conference.

Few hotels, plenty of creativity

Brazil has already shifted the dates for heads of state to attend the summit to the week before the main event, trying to ease pressure on Belem’s thin hotel supply. Two hotels are being built and two cruise ships for attendees will be docked in a nearby harbor.

Entrepreneurs are hard at work figuring out other creative ways to accommodate the visitors.

Businesses are looking to refurbish ferries with high-end suites. Developers plan to use idle land to put up refurbished shipping containers. Schools and churches have been earmarked to serve as hostels.

Love motels that usually rent rooms by the hour are being advertised as options for full national delegations. Yorann Costa, the owner of Motel Secreto, said he can tone down the “more sensual mood” of his establishment by removing erotic chairs.

“But the poles, for example, I can’t take out,” he said, adding that the ceiling mirrors would also have to stay.

Setting the right price was also tough, he said, because of the fierce speculation around what people were willing to pay.

Valter Correia, Brazil’s special secretary for COP30, said his office is planning to launch an official booking website within weeks to organize the market. He said his office is also looking for ways to discourage price gouging.

Correia said the government expects around 45,000 people to attend COP and that the government has planned enough new accommodation to meet that demand. However, the People’s Summit, a side event run by activist groups, says it expects an additional 15,000. Organizers say they are planning to help with accommodation, for example by building campsites.

City and state officials are also encouraging residents to travel and rent out their homes. That has unleashed a gold rush of sorts in Belem. Ads charging hundreds of thousands of dollars to rent apartments and houses for the month of COP have become common.

Interviews with landlords, tenants and a building manager revealed dozens of cases of people who were refused renewal of their rental lease so landlords could prepare apartments for COP visitors paying 10 times or more the usual rate. Rafaela Rodrigues, a businesswoman who says she was refused renewal of her rental, said she later found the apartment advertised for several times what she used to pay.

“It was chaos,” she said. “I had 10 days to look for a new place, rent it, move and give back my other apartment.”

RECENT DEATHS

Jessica Aber, 43, a former U.S. attorney, was found dead in her home on March 22, according to police in Alexandria, Virginia. Aber served as U.S. attorney for the Eastern District of Virginia from August 2021 until President Donald Trump’s inauguration in January. She was nominated to the position by former President Joe Biden and unanimously confirmed by the Senate.

George Bell, 67, an “American Horror Story” actor, former Harlem Globetrotter and once the tallest man in America at 7-foot-8, has died, a former employer, the Norfolk (Virginia) Sheriff’s Office, confirmed. According to local media outlet WCNC-TV, he died “surrounded by loved ones at his home in Durham, North Carolina.”

George Foreman, 76, a two-time world heavyweight champion and Olympic gold medalist, has died, according to a statement released March 21 by his family. One of the World Boxing Hall of Fame and the International Boxing Hall of Fame inductee’s most famous fights came against Muhammad Ali in the so-called “Rumble in the Jungle” that took place in 1974 in Zaire. Foreman later became a preacher and businessman who sold millions of George Foreman Grills.

Miller Gardner, 14, the son of longtime New York Yankees outfielder Brett Gardner, died March 21 during a family vacation, according to a social media post by Gardner and his wife, Jessica, that was distributed by the Yankees on March 23. The family did not disclose the location of their vacation or his death.

Han Jong-hee, 63, co-CEO of Samsung Electronics and also a board member, died at a hospital Tuesday while being treated for cardiac arrest, the company said. Han, 63, became chief executive officer of South Korea’s biggest company in 2022 and was also in charge of its consumer electronics and mobile devices division.

Jack Lilley, 91, a stuntman and actor known for roles in “Little House on the Prairie,” has died. According to respective Instagram posts from his show co-star Melissa Gilbert and son Clint Lilley, Lilley died March 19 after a storied Hollywood career that included various roles on the beloved ’70s historical drama, including a townsman and stage-coach driver.

Mia Love, 49, died March 23 at her home in Utah, a statement from her family said. Love’s daughter said on social media that she had been diagnosed with a glioblastoma, an aggressive form of brain cancer. Love made history in 2014 when she was elected as the first Black Republican woman to serve in Congress. For four years, she represented Utah’s 4th Congressional District.

Terry Manning, 77, a noted engineer, producer and musician, died Tuesday at his home in El Paso, Texas. His son Lucas Manning confirmed his death. A key figure in the music scene of Memphis, Tennessee, and beyond, Manning worked closely with artists across generations and genres, from Isaac Hayes and the Staple Singers, to Led Zeppelin and ZZ Top, Joe Walsh and Joe Cocker, Lenny Kravitz and Shakira, and many others.

Kenneth Sims, 65, a former College Football Hall of Famer, died March 21, the University of Texas announced. Sims played defensive end for Texas from 1978 to 1981 and was a consensus All-American as a junior and senior. Sims then went No. 1 in the NFL draft to the New England Patriots and had 17 sacks and five fumble recoveries in 74 games (64 starts) over eight NFL seasons with the Patriots.

Finnish president makes surprise Fla. visit

Stubb seeks to boost ties with Trump, US

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. – Finnish President Alexander Stubb made a surprise trip on Saturday to meet with President Donald Trump at his estate in Florida, where the two leaders discussed strengthening their countries’ bilateral partnership and played a round of golf.

“President Stubb and I look forward to strengthening the partnership between the United States and Finland, and that includes the purchase and development of a large number of badly needed Icebreakers for the U.S., delivering Peace and International Security for our Countries, and the World,” Trump said in a post his on Truth Social platform.

The two presidents met for breakfast, played golf and had lunch together. They also discussed foreign policy issues, including Ukraine.

Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskyy met with Stubb in Helsinki earlier this month.

The Finnish president’s office said in a statement that Stubb’s unannounced visit to Trump’s Mar-a-Lago estate in West Palm Beach, Florida, was informal.

The meeting took place a day after Trump’s vice president, JD Vance, made an uninvited visit to Greenland, a semi-autonomous territory of Finland’s close Nordic ally Denmark. Vance accused Denmark of doing a poor job keeping Greenland safe.

Trump has expressed interest in acquiring Greenland, part of a growing international focus on competition to control the Arctic. Denmark’s government opposes such a move, as do most Greenland residents.

Finland is the world’s leading producer of icebreakers. About 80% of the ships have been designed by Finnish companies, and around 60% of them have been built at Finnish shipyards.

In November, Canada, Finland and the U.S. administration of former President Joe Biden signed a deal called the Icebreaker Collaboration Effort to work “together to develop world-class Arctic and polar icebreakers through the exchange of knowledge, information, and resources.”

Before his visit, Stubb had said he hoped to play golf with Trump and that icebreaker diplomacy could help Finland maintain good relations with the U.S. and Trump.

India, US making progress toward deal, officials say

Seek to reach trade agreement by fall

Manoj Kumar

NEW DELHI – Indian and U.S. officials discussed trade issues including the reduction of tariffs and easing of non-tariff barriers, making progress toward a bilateral trade agreement during several days of talks in New Delhi, they said on Saturday.

The negotiations, led by officials from India’s commerce ministry and a U.S. trade delegation headed by Brendan Lynch, assistant U.S. trade representative for South and Central Asia, were held from Wednesday through Saturday. Separately, U.S. Deputy Secretary of State Christopher Landau spoke with Indian Foreign Secretary Vikram Misri about efforts to reduce trade barriers and achieve a “fair and balanced bilateral trade relationship,” while also strengthening defense and technology cooperation to bolster regional security.

Landau thanked India for its efforts in addressing illegal immigration to the United States and urged continued cooperation, the U.S. Department of State said in a statement.

The talks come as U.S. President Donald Trump prepares to impose reciprocal tariffs on multiple trading partners from April 2, with India hoping for an exemption amid the bilateral talks. Both countries aim to sign the first tranche of a bilateral trade deal by fall.

“The successful conclusion of the discussions reflects progress in efforts to expand India-U.S. bilateral trade and investment relations to promote prosperity, security and innovation in both countries,” a statement by India’s commerce ministry said.

Last month, during Prime Minister Narendra Modi’s visit to Washington, India pledged to boost purchases of U.S. energy products and defense equipment, and the two sides agreed to aim for a deal targeting bilateral trade of $500 billion by 2030.

Trump has called India a “tariff king,” with the U.S. wanting India to reduce levies on products and seeking greater market access for U.S. companies.

Piyush Goyal, India’s trade minister, visited Washington earlier this month for talks with U.S. Trade Representative Jamieson Greer and Commerce Secretary Howard Lutnick. Sector-specific expert engagements for the bilateral trade agreement will begin virtually in the coming weeks, followed by an in-person negotiating round, the joint statement said.

The U.S. currently has a $45.6 billion trade deficit with India. While the U.S. trade-weighted average tariff rate stands at about 2.2%, India’s average tariff is significantly higher at 12%, according to World Trade Organization data.

It was an illustration of how Trump’s order, issued on Thursday, spurred everyday Americans, historians and politicians to consider the meaning of patriotism and the purpose of history.

Singling out the Smithsonian Institution, which comprises 21 museums and the National Zoo, Trump ordered the removal of what he called “improper ideology.” The president also instructed Vice President JD Vance, a member of the Smithsonian Institution’s 17-member Board of Regents, to oversee the taking down of monuments and sculptures that the order called “divisive narratives that distort our shared history.”

An example cited in the order included a Smithsonian American Art Museum exhibit titled “The Shape of Power: Stories of Race and American Sculpture,” which according to the museum’s website “examines for the first time the ways in which sculpture has shaped and reflected attitudes and understandings about race in the United States.”

The National Museum of African American History and Culture was accused in the order of attempting to portray “American and Western culture as harmful.”

Smithsonian officials and several Democratic and Republican members of its board did not respond to requests for comment on Friday.

Cindy Werner, a Republican and state director for the Frederick Douglass Foundation in Wisconsin, said Trump’s order “will expand the different stories in America’s history, highlighting what makes our country great – allowing more highlights in what brings us together rather than dividing us.”

Trump’s order reflects the rhetoric of Project 2025, a policy blueprint published before Trump’s victory by conservative thinkers, some of whom have since taken prominent roles in his administration.

“America is now divided between two opposing forces: woke revolutionaries and those who believe in the ideals of the American revolution,” according to Project 2025.

Many historians have challenged that perspective.

Kyle Mays, a professor at the University of California, Los Angeles, called Trump’s executive order a “fascist move” to erase the history of racism and sexism that shaped the United States.

“The truth in American history requires honesty based on evidence, not ideology rooted in erasing what happened,” said Mays, a professor of African American studies, American Indian studies and history.

Historian Clayborne Carson, an expert on Martin Luther King Jr., said as a historian he considers many aspects of the past.

“The people that are pointing the finger saying they’re revising history, in some respects, that’s the division of the country.”

Since taking office on January 20, the Trump administration has launched efforts to dismantle federal DEI initiatives that have led to the removal, sometimes briefly, of historical content about African Americans and other minorities from government websites, and intensified attacks on educational institutions. The administration has focused on museums, universities and public schools that emphasize race, systemic inequities and diverse cultural contributions.

“I don’t know what’s left of the African American History Museum after this order, depending on the interpretation of it,” said Iowa State University history professor Amy Rutenberg, who focuses on modern U.S. women’s and gender history.

Sen. Catherine Cortez Masto, a Democrat from Nevada who is on the Smithsonian board, said in a statement that Trump’s order was a “weak, pathetic effort to distract from his disastrous plans to cut Medicaid and use tariffs to raise costs for middle class Americans.”

Tina van Pelt came to the National Mall on Friday with her child and friends to see the cherry blossoms, and when she heard about Trump’s order the night before, she said it shocked her.

“I would hate to see the quality of our exhibits go down due to an idea that it’s unpatriotic to show the actual history of our country.”

Tariffs

tariffs expired in November 2019 under the original report.

Trump administration officials are aware of the issue, auto industry lobbyists said.

Honoring past commitments

The Canadian government confirmed the USMCA auto side letters’ terms in an emailed statement to Reuters, and said it fully expects the U.S. to honor the agreements.

Canada also has the right to take retaliatory measures in response to U.S. Section 232 tariffs that are inconsistent with USMCA and World Trade Organization obligations, the statement said.

“Mexico is evaluating all the legal aspects before the USMCA and the WTO,” said Luis Rosendo Gutierrez, the Mexican Economy Ministry’s undersecretary for foreign trade. “The most important consideration is to identify what is best for Mexican consumers and producers.”

The Office of the USTR and the Commerce Department did not respond to Reuters’ queries on the matter.

The White House did not address questions about the protections but said: “America cannot just be an assembler of foreign-made parts – we must become a manufacturing powerhouse that dominates every step of the supply chain.”

Canadian Prime Minister Mark Carney spoke with Trump on Friday for the first time since taking office, a conversation described by both men as productive. But Carney won no commitment from Trump to ease tariffs on Canada, and warned the U.S. president that he would impose retaliatory tariffs after Trump’s April 2 reciprocal tariff announcement.

Room to grow

The auto quotas were meant to allow for some growth in Mexican and Canadian production. If honored, they would still exceed U.S. auto imports from the two countries.

The protections agreed to by Lighthizer removed a major stumbling block to the completion of USMCA negotiations as Trump separately pursued the auto trade probe. They are posted alongside the USMCA main text on the USTR website.

“The USMCA side letters for automotive were designed to prevent the very situation Canada and Mexico now confront – having to negotiate with the U.S. with the tariffs hanging over their heads,” said Dan Ujcz, a lawyer and former Canada trade envoy who specializes in U.S.-Canadian trade matters.

He noted that as USMCA negotiations came to a close in late 2019, the Trump administration granted tariff exemptions to Canadian and Mexican steel and aluminum imports, but Trump has since rescinded them.

“As with steel and aluminum, the end game for autos is increased domestic investment and resetting the quotas, along with preventing Chinese OEMs (original equipment manufacturers)” into the North American value chain, said Ujcz, who is senior counsel with Thompson Hine in Columbus, Ohio.

Lighthizer, who had been under consideration for senior Trump economic Cabinet posts, declined to comment, referring a query to USTR.

Sudan army chief vows no forgiveness for RSF

REUTERS

CAIRO – Sudanese army chief Abdel Fattah al-Burhan ruled out any reconciliation with the paramilitary Rapid Support Forces in a video statement on Saturday in which he vowed to crush the group.

“We will neither forgive, nor compromise, nor negotiate,” he said, reaffirming the military’s commitment to restoring national unity and stability.

Burhan also said fighters who “repent to the truth” could still be amnestied if they lay down their arms, particularly those who are in rebel-held areas.

Earlier on Saturday, the army said it had taken control of a major market in Khartoum’s twin city of Omdurman, which had previously been used by the RSF to launch attacks during a devastating two-year-old war.

The Sudanese army has also declared victory over the RSF in Khartoum, claiming control of most parts of the capital.

tions calls the world’s worst humanitarian crisis and plunged several areas into famine.

The army said in a statement that its forces were now in control of the market in western Omdurman, Souq Libya, having seized weapons and equipment left behind by the RSF when they fled.

Souq Libya is one of the largest and most important commercial hubs in Sudan.

The army already controlled most of Omdurman, home to two big military bases. It appears intent on securing control of the entire capital area, which is made up of the three cities of Khartoum, Omdurman and Bahri, divided by branches of the River Nile.

The RSF has not commented on the army’s advance in Omdurman, where the paramilitary forces still hold some territory.

The war erupted amid a power struggle between the army and RSF ahead of a planned transition to civilian rule. It ruined much of Khartoum, uprooted more than 12 million Sudanese from their homes, and left about half of the 50 million population suffering acute hunger.

Overall deaths are hard to estimate, but a study published last year said the toll may have reached 61,000 in Khartoum state alone in the first 14 months of the conflict.

The war has added to instability in the region, with Sudan’s neighbors Libya, Chad, Central African Republic and South Sudan each weathering internal bouts of conflict over recent years.

IN BRIEF

Trump tells NBC he ‘couldn’t care less’ if automakers hike prices

WASHINGTON – President Donald Trump said on Saturday he did not warn car industry executives against raising prices as tariffs on foreign-made autos come into force, telling NBC News he “couldn’t care less” if they do.

The White House has been preparing to impose new tariffs on a range of consumer goods on April 2, a move that has drawn criticism from international leaders and concerns about potential price increases for consumers.

In the NBC News interview, Trump said his permanent tariffs on foreign-made automobiles would be a boost to U.S.-domiciled factories and was confident the move would lead to increased sales of American-made cars. “I hope they raise their prices, because if they do, people are gonna buy American-made cars,” Trump said.

Trump maintained that he would only consider negotiating on the tariffs “if people are willing to give us something of great value.”

Taliban releases US citizen who was detained in Afghanistan

American citizen Faye Hall said on Saturday she had been released by the Taliban administration after being detained in Afghanistan last month.

“I’ve never been so proud to be an American citizen,” Hall said in a video posted by President Donald Trump on Truth Social. “Thank you, Mr President,” she added. “God bless you.”

A U.S. official said Adam Boehler, the special presidential envoy for hostage affairs, along with Qatari officials and others, negotiated her release. Hall was arrested in February with a British couple, Barbie and Peter Reynolds.

British media reported that the couple, in their 70s, had been running projects in schools in Afghanistan for 18 years, deciding to stay even after the Taliban returned to power in 2021.

There was no mention of the couple, whose family has pleaded for their release amid concerns over their health.

Denmark’s prime minister set to visit Greenland amid US interest

COPENHAGEN, Denmark – Danish Prime Minister Mette Frederiksen will visit Greenland this week for talks with the semi-autonomous territory’s new government, she said on Saturday, amid U.S. interest in taking control of the Arctic island.

“I look forward to continuing the close and trusting cooperation between Greenland and Denmark,” Frederiksen said in a statement.

During a visit to a U.S. military base in the north of Greenland on Friday, U.S. Vice President JD Vance accused Denmark – which has controlled Greenland since 1721 – of not doing a good job of keeping the island safe and suggested the U.S. would better protect the strategically located island.

Frederiksen, who has said it is up to the people of Greenland to decide their own future, said on Friday that Vance’s description of Denmark was not fair.

“I have the deepest respect for how the Greenlandic people and Greenlandic politicians are handling the great pressure on Greenland,” she said in the statement on Saturday.

Guinea junta chief pardons ex-leader over stadium massacre

CONAKRY, Guinea – Guinea’s junta leader has pardoned former military leader Moussa Dadis Camara for “health reasons” after a court last year found him guilty of crimes against humanity in a 2009 stadium massacre, according to a decree read on state television late Friday.

Camara, who seized power in a 2008 coup, was sentenced to 20 years in prison for his role in the massacre of at least 157 people during a pro-democracy rally in a stadium in the capital, Conakry.

On September 28, 2009, tens of thousands of people had gathered to press Camara not to stand in a presidential election the following year. Many were shot, stabbed, beaten or crushed in a stampede as security forces fired tear gas and charged the stadium. At least a dozen women were raped by security forces, prosecutors said during the trial.

Camara was convicted alongside seven other military commanders.

The West African nation’s current military government announced on Thursday it would pay the compensation to victims that the court had ordered Camara and the others to cover.

Junta leader Mamady Doumbouya himself seized power in a 2021 coup.

Prince Harry accused of bullying and harassment by charity chair

REUTERS

LONDON – The chair of a charity Prince Harry set up to help young people with HIV and AIDS in Lesotho and Botswana has accused him of “harassment and bullying at scale” after he quit last week over a dispute he described as “devastating.”

Harry, the younger son of King Charles III, co-founded Sentebale in 2006 in honor of his late mother, Princess Diana. He left it, along with co-founder Prince Seeiso of Lesotho and the board of trustees, following a dispute with chair Sophie Chandauka.

In an interview with Sky News that will be broadcast in full on Sunday, Chandauka said, referring to the way Harry resigned: “At some point on Tuesday, Prince Harry authorized the release of a damaging piece of news to the outside world without informing me or my country directors, or my executive director.”

“And can you imagine what that attack has done for me, on me and the 540 individuals in the Sentebale organizations and their family,” she said. “That is an example of harassment and bullying at scale.”

Representatives for Harry and his wife, Meghan, did not immediately respond to a request for comment on the allegations.

Sky News said the couple declined to offer any formal response to the interview.

A source close to the charity’s trustees and patrons, including Harry, said they fully expected what they described as a publicity stunt and reached their collective decision with this in mind.

The same source said they remained firm in their decision to resign.

Harry and Seeiso said in a joint statement on Wednesday that it was “devastating” that the relationship between the charity’s trustees and Chandauka had broken beyond repair.

Chandauka has previously said Sentebale was beset by “poor governance, weak executive management, abuse of power, bullying, harassment, misogyny (and) misogynoir.”

In an interview with the Financial Times published on Saturday, she said she was asked by Harry’s team to protect Meghan after negative media coverage, which she refused to do.

She also said the way Sentebale was run “was no longer appropriate ... in a post-Black Lives Matter world ... funders were asking for locally-led initiatives.”

Harry and Seeiso said on Wednesday that the trustees acted in the charity’s best interests in asking Chandauka to step down, but in turn she sued Sentebale to remain in her position.

US to revoke authorizations for Venezuela oil partners, sources say

Marianna Parraga
REUTERS

HOUSTON – The U.S. government has notified foreign partners of Venezuela’s state oil company PDVSA of the imminent cancellation of authorizations that allow them to export Venezuelan oil and byproducts, sources close to the decision by President Donald Trump’s administration said on Saturday.

In recent years, former President Joe Biden’s administration granted the authorizations to secure Venezuelan oil for refineries from Spain to India as exceptions to the U.S. sanction regime on the South American country.

The companies that had received licenses and comfort letters from Washington include Spain’s Repsol, Italy’s Eni, France’s Maurel & Prom, India’s Reliance Industries and U.S. Global Oil Terminals.

Most companies had already suspended imports of Venezuelan oil following Trump’s imposition last week of secondary tariffs on buyers of Venezuelan oil and gas, according to sources and vessel tracking data.

The combination of tariffs and license cancellations to enforce sanctions is expected to squeeze Venezuela’s oil exports in the coming months, after they began to decline in March, according to the data.

In February, Venezuela exported 910,000 barrels per day of crude and fuel, above January’s 867,000 barrels per day.

Similar measures by Trump’s first administration in 2020 knocked down Venezuela’s oil output and exports, creating the need for PDVSA to use intermediaries to allocate cargoes to China, and leading to a pact with Iran. Those middlemen still do business with PDVSA.

PDVSA, Repsol, Eni, Maurel & Prom, Reliance and the U.S. State Department did not immediately reply to requests for comment. Global Oil could not be reached for comment. The U.S. Treasury Department declined to comment.

Last month, Trump said a key license to U.S. producer Chevron to operate in Venezuela and export crude to the U.S. would be canceled. Days later, the Treasury Department ordered the company to wind down Venezuelan operations, and this month extended the deadline to May 27.

The withdrawal of the most important U.S. license for Venezuela’s energy industry has sent a strong signal of Washington’s policy change toward Venezuela as Trump’s administration also curbs migration, with a special focus on Venezuelans illegally in the U.S.

Following reports by international observers of irregularities in President Nicolas Maduro’s 2024 reelection, Trump has ramped up pressure on his government while accusing him of failing to make progress on electoral reforms and migrant returns.

It was not immediately clear if all PDVSA partners were given the same May 27 deadline to wind down operations. The terms of Chevron’s license termination also have not been completely clarified.

U.S. Secretary of State Marco Rubio said this month that foreign oil companies in Venezuela would receive new guidance.

Maduro has criticized the sanctions, saying they amount to an “economic war.”

Ham as agrees to ceasefire proposal

It’s unclear if Israel also has accepted Gaza deal

CAIRO – Hamas has agreed to a Gaza ceasefire proposal it received days ago from mediators Egypt and Qatar, the Palestinian militant group’s chief said on Saturday.

“Two days ago, we received a proposal from the mediators in Egypt and Qatar. We dealt with it positively and accepted it,” Khalil al-Hayya said in a televised speech.

“We hope that the (Israeli) occupation will not undermine (it),” said Hayya, who leads the Hamas negotiating team in indirect talks aimed at securing a ceasefire in the Israel-Hamas war in Gaza that erupted in October 2023.

Security sources told Reuters on Thursday that Egypt had received positive indications from Israel over a new ceasefire proposal that would include a transitional phase.

The proposal suggests Hamas release five of the Israeli hostages it is holding each week, the sources said.

The Israeli prime minister’s office said it had held a series of consultations according to the proposal that was received from the mediators, and that Israel had conveyed to the mediators a counter-proposal in full coordination with the United States.

Reuters asked the prime minister’s office if it had also agreed to the ceasefire proposal but it did not immediately respond.

Phased ceasefire

The first phase of the ceasefire between Israel and Hamas went into force on January 19 after 15 months of war and involved a halt to fighting, the release of some of the Israeli hostages held by Hamas and the freeing of some Palestinian prisoners.

Phase two of the three-phase deal is intended to focus on agreements on the release of the remaining hostages and the withdrawal of Israeli troops from Gaza. Hamas says any proposals must allow the launch of the second phase, while Israel has offered to expand the first 42-day phase.

In response to calls on Hamas to disarm by Israel and the United States, Hayya said the group’s arsenal was a red line and that it would not disarm as long as the Israeli occupation exists.

Israel and the U.S. say Hamas must not have a role in post-war Gaza arrangements.

Israeli military strikes on Gaza continued on Saturday, killing at least 20 Palestinians across the enclave, health authorities said.

The Israeli military said it had begun “ground activity” in the Jneina neighborhood of the Rafah area to expand what it described as the security zone in southern Gaza.

On March 18, Israel resumed bombing and ground operations in Gaza, which it said were intended to increase pressure on Hamas to free hostages.

It has since issued evacuation orders to tens of thousands of residents in several areas in the northern and southern Gaza Strip, citing rocket firing into Israeli territories.

More than 50,000 Palestinians have been killed by the Israeli offensive in Gaza, Palestinian officials say.

Israel began its offensive after thousands of Hamas-led gunmen attacked communities in southern Israel on October 7, 2023, killing 1,200 people and abducting 251 as hostages, according to Israeli tallies.

Missing medics

Meanwhile, the Red Cross said on Saturday it is gravely concerned about the fate of nine Palestine Red Crescent ambulance crew members who have been missing for seven days in Gaza.

The international humanitarian organization has not had any contact with the crew since they came under heavy fire while operating in Rafah in the early hours of March 23, it said in a statement.

“It is vital that there is information and access to ensure the safe return of these humanitarians to their families who are in a nightmare without knowing if their loved ones are alive,” it stated.

According to the U.N. at least 1,060 health care workers have been killed in the eighteen months since Israel launched its offensive in Gaza after the October 2023 attack.

Zelenskyy: Ukraine expecting strong response to attacks

Country facing frequent Russian drone strikes

REUTERS

President Volodymyr Zelenskyy said on Saturday that Ukraine expected a strong response from Western countries to the nearly daily Russian drone attacks on its territory.

Within an hour of Zelenskyy’s comments, delivered in his nightly video address, officials in Ukraine’s second-largest city, Kharkiv, reported a mass Russian drone attack that killed two people and injured at least 25 others.

Russian drones struck a military hospital, shopping center, apartment blocks and other targets in Kharkiv late on Saturday.

“According to preliminary information, there were injuries among the servicemen undergoing treatment in the medical center,” the military’s General Staff said on the Telegram messaging app.

Kharkiv Mayor Ihor Terekhov said one of the dead had been pulled out from under rubble. He put the overall number of injured at 27.

He said an office building was also among the targets, with one drone triggering a fire.

Oleh Syniehubov, the regional governor, said 25 people were hurt, while prosecutors, quoted by public broadcaster Suspilne, put the number at 30. Suspilne posted photos of rescue teams in protective equipment sifting through rubble as well as piles of twisted metal and construction materials outside buildings.

Kharkiv, located in northeastern Ukraine, resisted capture in the early weeks of Russia’s February 2022 invasion. But as Russian forces focused their attention on capturing large swaths of eastern Ukraine, the city has been a frequent target of air attacks.

Drones also hit the southeastern city of Dnipro overnight, killing four people, and the central city of Kryvyi Rih, where nine others were injured.

Ukraine overnight – the Ukrainian military said 94 of them had been downed.

“Russia is striking against everyone who seeks to end the war. It is impossible to ignore hundreds of (Iranian-designed) Shaheds every night.

“We expect a response, a serious response. We are working to ensure there is a strong reaction, especially from America, Europe and all those in the world who rely on diplomacy.”

The U.S. has brokered two ceasefires over the past week – one designed to allow shipping through the Black Sea, the other intended to stop attacks on energy targets.

Ukraine and Russia have accused each other of violating the accord on energy sites.

In his remarks, Zelenskyy also said he spoke to Ukraine’s top military commander, Oleksandr Syrskiy, about the situation along the roughly 600-mile front line of the war, which began when Russia invaded Ukraine in February 2022. Also discussed, he said, were areas “where our forces are operating inside Russian territory.”

“We are maintaining active measures that prevent the occupiers from advancing into (Ukraine’s) Sumy and Kharkiv regions,” Zelenskyy said.

Ukrainian troops still maintain a presence in western Russia’s Kursk region seven months after a cross-border incursion, though Russian forces have recaptured territory.

And Zelenskyy said on Friday that Ukrainian forces had taken “certain steps” in Russia outside the Kursk region to ease pressure on Ukrainian troops in the area.

Large crowds rally over Istanbul mayor’s jailing

Protests are biggest in over a decade for Turkey

Can Sezer and Emilie Madi

ISTANBUL – Hundreds of thousands of Turks protested in Istanbul on Saturday against the jailing of Mayor Ekrem Imamoglu, President Tayyip Erdogan’s main rival, sustaining the largest demonstrations Turkey has seen in more than a decade.

A letter from Imamoglu was read out at the rally to cheers from the crowd. “I have no fear, you are behind me and by my side. I have no fear because the nation is united. The nation is united against the oppressor,” the letter said.

“They can put me in jail and try me as much as they want, the nation has shown that it will crush all traps and plots.”

Hundreds of thousands of Turks nationwide have heeded opposition calls to protest since Imamoglu was detained earlier this month and then jailed pending trial on graft charges.

Protests have been mostly peaceful but nearly 2,000 people have been detained.

The main opposition Republican People’s Party, other opposition parties, rights groups and some Western powers have all said the case against Imamoglu is a politicized effort to eliminate a potential electoral threat to Erdogan.

The government denies any influence over the judiciary and says the courts are independent.

‘Justice will be served’

Demonstrators waving Turkish flags and banners flocked to the sea-front rally at Maltepe on the Asian side of Istanbul for Saturday’s “Freedom for Imamoglu” rally, organized by the Republican People’s Party, known as the CHP. Police imposed tight security around a venue where opposition supporters were gathering.

“If justice is silent, the people will speak,” said one banner held aloft in the crowd.

“I am not afraid, and I will continue to resist. I call on everyone not to be afraid They fired me (from my job) but one day, justice will be served,” said Gunay Yildiz, a former employee of Istanbul’s Esenyurt district municipality.

Bunyamin Turan, a retired teacher, said: “When we look at the history of humanity, in all countries, all administrations, all regimes where there was such oppression, sooner or later, the people and those who resisted the oppression have won. The real owners of those countries won.”

CHP leader Ozgur Ozel, speaking at the rally, said millions of Turks were seeking Imamoglu’s release and an election. He said the charges against the mayor were baseless and politically motivated, and the CHP called for a boycott of media outlets, brands and stores that it says are pro-Erdogan.

Last Sunday, the CHP held a primary election to endorse Imamoglu as its candidate for the next presidential election. That is scheduled to be held in 2028, but the CHP is calling for an early vote, arguing that the government has lost legitimacy.

Interior Minister Ali Yerlikaya said last week that nearly 1,900 people had been detained since the protests began, adding that courts had jailed 260 of them pending trial as of Thursday.

Erdogan, who has dominated Turkish politics for over two decades, has dismissed the protests as a “show,” warned of legal consequences, and called on the CHP to stop “provoking” Turks.

Since Imamoglu’s detention, Turkish financial assets have plunged, prompting the central bank to use reserves to support the lira. The turmoil has sent shock waves through the private sector.

The government has said the impact will be limited and temporary. The central bank said the economy’s core dynamics were unharmed but it would take further measures if needed.

MYANMAR EARTHQUAKE

In ‘Little Myanmar,’ many fear for relatives

Residents in Singapore, Taiwan check for news

NEW TAIPEI, Taiwan – Win Win has been glued to social media, trying to work out whether her family in Myanmar’s Mandalay survived Friday’s powerful earthquake, distracting herself at the Taiwan restaurant where she works by serving samosas and other snacks.

“We spoke last night but then nothing today. I can’t get through. I’m so scared for them,” Win Win, one of Taiwan’s estimated 50,000 Sino-Burmese, told Reuters on Saturday at the eatery in Little Myanmar in New Taipei, neighboring the capital, Taipei.

Myanmar’s second-largest city, Mandalay, which lies close to the epicenter of the 7.7 magnitude quake, has a large ethnic Chinese population, many of whom have ties to Taiwan, whose government has offered to send rescue teams.

Taiwan’s foreign ministry says it has yet to receive a response to that offer.

Yee Yu Nai, sitting at a snack store in Little Myanmar, scrolled through her phone looking for the latest news from Mandalay, where her sister lives.

“I know their house is OK as it was newly built, but the street is very badly damaged,” she said.

Taiwan’s Myanmar community traces its history back to the end of the Chinese civil war in 1949, when many of the defeated Republic of China soldiers fled into what was then called Burma before eventually being evacuated to Taiwan.

Others have come more recently, fleeing repression and anti-Chinese sentiment.

Another resident of Taiwan’s Little Myanmar, who asked to be identified by her family name of Huang to avoid repercussions for her relatives still in the country, said the precarious state of civil strife-hit Myanmar was her biggest concern.

“I just don’t think anyone is coming to save them,” she said of her relatives still in Mandalay.

Worries and uncertainties in Singapore

In Singapore’s Peninsula Plaza, a mall where Burmese businesses and migrants gather every weekend, logistics company administrator Su Laff, 41, bemoaned how before the quake, her relatives were already living through civil unrest and recently survived floods. “We’ve lost people already,” she said.

There are about 200,000 Burmese in the wealthy city-state, according to estimates by local media, with many in blue-collar jobs such as domestic helpers or construction workers. Singapore on Saturday sent an 80-member contingent of doctors, paramedics and search specialists alongside equipment to help with disaster rescue efforts.

Shopkeeper Min Koon, 35, said he was unable to reach his family until Saturday morning, when his sister regained network access and he found out a wall had fallen on his relative in Mandalay but they have no access to medical care.

“What injury they have, (whether it is) heavy or not, we don’t know because they don’t have any medication or assistance,” he said.

Meanwhile, Aung Myo Thant, 41, was paying double the usual price to fly home on Sunday to be with his wife and children in Mandalay. Thant, who works as a painter, was also only able to reach his wife Saturday. While his family is unhurt, their three-story home had collapsed.

“I cannot control my (emotions). I am like the crazy man, you know. My life and my family’s life is gone,” he said.

Myanmar

A day after making a rare call for international assistance, Myanmar’s junta chief, Senior Gen. Min Aung Hlaing, traveled to hard-hit Mandalay near the epicenter of the quake, which brought down buildings and triggered fires in some areas.

“The Chairman of the State Administration Council instructed authorities to expedite search and rescue efforts and address any urgent needs,” the junta said in a statement on state media, referring to Min Aung Hlaing.

Airports closed

An initial assessment by Myanmar’s opposition National Unity Government said at least 2,900 buildings, 30 roads and seven bridges had been damaged by the quake.

“Due to significant damage, Naypyitaw and Mandalay international airports are temporarily closed,” said the NUG, which includes remnants of the elected civilian government ousted by the military in a 2021 coup that triggered the civil war.

The control tower at the airport in Naypyitaw, Myanmar’s purpose-built capital city, collapsed, rendering it inoperable, a person with knowledge of the situation told Reuters.

A Myanmar junta spokesman did not respond to calls seeking comment.

Hospitals in central and northwestern Myanmar were struggling to cope with the influx of injured people, the U.N. Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs said, warning that damage to roads was hindering access.

Seventeen cargo trucks of shelter and medical supplies were due to arrive on Sunday to address shortages of medicines, including blood bags and anesthetics, the agency added.

A Chinese rescue team arrived at the airport in Myanmar’s commercial capital of Yangon, hundreds of miles from Mandalay and Naypyitaw, and will travel upcountry by bus, state media said.

Chinese President Xi Jinping spoke by phone with the junta chief, China’s Embassy in Myanmar said on Saturday, and said Beijing would provide $13.77 million worth of aid, including tents, blankets and emergency medical kits.

and has sanctioned its officials, including Min Aung Hlaing, has said it would provide some assistance.

Relief supplies from India on a military aircraft also landed in Yangon, according to Myanmar state media, and India’s government said it was also dispatching ships with 40 tons of humanitarian aid.

Russia, Malaysia and Singapore were also sending plane loads of relief supplies and personnel.

‘No help coming’

Residents in the hardest-hit areas are desperate for the help.

The quake, which hit around lunchtime on Friday, affected wide swaths of Myanmar, from the central plains around Mandalay to the hills of Shan in the east, parts of which are not completely under the junta’s control.

Rescue operations in Mandalay could not match the scale of the disaster, one resident said by phone, asking not to be named because of security concerns.

“Many people are trapped but there is no help coming just simply because there isn’t manpower or equipment or vehicles,” he said.

In Bangkok, more than 600 miles from the epicenter, authorities on Saturday pushed ahead with efforts to find construction workers trapped under the rubble of the collapsed tower, using excavators, drones and search-and-rescue dogs.

Thailand’s Deputy Prime Minister Anutin Charnvirakul said all possible resources had been deployed to search for survivors and to bring out bodies of the deceased.

“We always have hope,” he told reporters. “We’re still working around the clock.”

Chanpen Kaewnoi, 39, said she rushed over on Friday afternoon after seeing news reports that the under-construction building where her mother and younger sister were working had collapsed.

“I called my sister, but no matter how many times I tried to call her there was no connection,” she said after a sleepless night at the site.

“I want to wait for my mother and sister,” said Chanpen, who is also a construction worker, “I want to see their faces again.”

Across the sprawling metropolis, where such quakes are rare, there may be up to 5,000 damaged buildings, including residential towers, said Anek Siripanchorn, a board member of Council of Engineers Thailand, which is helping municipal authorities.

“We are going through hundreds of cases,” he said.

“If we see cases where there is potential danger, we will immediately send engineers.”
