amounts of at least 8 inches to 10 inches are possible farther west in southeast Missouri. This will bring even more snow than the winter storm system on January 10, and could be the biggest snow for parts of the area since Feb. 14-15, 2021. Snow will begin to taper off between 4 a.m. and 7 a.m. Wednesday. This will be a dry, fluffy snow that will be prone to some blowing and drifting. Visibility will be reduced during the heaviest periods of snow. After the snow ends, the region will have an extended period of bitter cold temperatures. We will likely see tem-woman from Washington County; and three people from Pike County for whom no information was available Monday. "We must remember, this isn't just a number — these are Kentuckians who will be missed by their families and loved ones," Beshear said in a Facebook post Monday night. "Please pray for our commonwealth and our neighbors who have lost people they love." More than 1,000 rescues were conducted over the weekend because of the widespread flooding and severe weather, Beshear said. As of Monday morning, more than 300 state and federal roads remained closed, including 14 closed because of mudslides and three closed because of rockslides. One of those rockslides happened near the Caldwell-Hopkins County line at the 87 mile marker of Interstate 69 northbound, Kentucky Transportation Cabinet District 2 reported over the weekend. Road closures were reported in all 120 counties, but areas with the most closed roads included western, southern and southeast Kentucky, the governor said. Responders continued search and rescue efforts Tuesday, and the commonwealth remained under a state of emergency. "We are still in the search and rescue phase of this emergency," Beshear said during a Monday morning news conference. "We still have multiple different missions that are underway. There are still people that are in harm's way, and it's very important today that we continue to remind folks not to drive through standing water, not to drive around barricades. They are there for a reason. We need to make sure that we are not creating additional emergency situations so that all of our first responders can focus on those that we know are stranded and need help." Beshear also warned that incoming wintry weather may slow recovery efforts. "We're gonna' have our transportation cabinet officials and our county and city folks still working the flooding and the debris removal at the same time that they're trying to work the snow issues. So my hope is we get the lower side, which could be just a couple of inches, but if we get 6 inches, it's going to really complicate the clean-up," Beshear said.

Western Kentucky is among the areas expected to see multiple inches of snow Tuesday. As of 6 p.m. Monday, WPSD Local 6 meteorologist Mark Daniels said much of the area the television station covers was expected to get 4 to 8 inches of snow, and some locations could have 10 inches to 1 foot. Bitterly cold Arctic air is expected to follow the snowfall. The Washington Street Community Warming Center in Paducah said it plans to remain open all day Wednesday if Tuesday's weather unfolds as forecast. To help people stay warm, the center is accepting donations of sweatpants, undershirts and thermals, as well as monetary donations. The center's Cash App ID is $washingtonwarmcenter, and donations can also be made via PayPal by scanning the QR code included with this article. The Courier Journal in Louisville reported that representatives from the Federal Emergency Management Agency and mutual aid teams from other states have been in Kentucky since Sunday assisting with search and rescue efforts. When it comes to monetary aid from FEMA, Beshear said during a Monday afternoon news conference that Kentucky is applying for individual assistance to help people impacted by the flooding and severe weather event. "You have my promise. I will push on FEMA to make it as easy as it can be, and they're limited by Congress. It can't be easy for them, but I will do everything I can to put as much pressure on to get as many people approved," Beshear said. "Listen, I work for you, and the only people that I care about making sure I get the very best are you."
