BY KODEE BRINEGAR

An Elizabethtown couple pleaded not guilty to murder after a grand jury indicted them on the charge for reportedly throwing a man over a balcony, killing him.

Shawn Durbin, 39, and Nancy Durbin, 36, appeared Tuesday by Zoom in Hardin Circuit Court, where Judge Larry Ashlock warned the couple they could face the death penalty.

Following the brief appearance, Assistant Commonwealth's Attorney Chris McCrary said the Durbins likely won't face the death penalty for the capital charge.

McCrary said the Durbins could only face the death penalty if aggravating circumstances existed in their case.

"If aggravating circumstances existed, the Commonwealth can file notice of seeking aggravated sentences," McCrary said. "I'm not aware of any aggravating circumstances at this time, and the Commonwealth has not filed any notice to seek an aggravated sentence at this time."

According to Kentucky Law, aggravating circumstances include when the victim is a police officer or public official killed in the line of duty; murdering someone for financial gain or hiring someone to commit murder; murdering someone during another felony such as a robbery, rape, arson

The Stovall Cabin, constructed in 1873 for Ed and Matilda Stovall, was relocated in 2009 to Saunders Springs Nature Preserve. The cabin has suffered extensive termite and powderpost beetle damage, as well as foundation issues. Radcliff City Council will look at cost of repairs to this and other cabins Tuesday during its meeting at Colvin Community Center.

The cabins at Saunders Springs Nature Preserve in Radcliff are iconic structures.

However, at least two of the historic structures are in need of repair.

"Everybody loves our cabins," Radcliff Mayor J.J. Duvall said Monday during a city council work session. "One of our cabins is in pretty rough shape, and we have another one that needs a little work."

The cold temperatures Monday night didn't stop guests from traveling to Colvin Community Center for a chance to get a taste of the Radcliff Woman's Club's Taste of Radcliff.

Visitors were able to collect samples from food vendors, and guests also were surrounded by the lights and décor of the city's annual Festival of Trees at the community center.

First-timer Harold Pollard came with his wife, Meredith, to see what type of food could be found within or around Radcliff.

"We just moved to the city in early November, and we're still trying to figure out what types of foods are available," Harold said. "There is just so many options to choose from."

Radcliff to sell former FFO property

BY GREG THOMPSON
THE NEWS-ENTERPRISE

The City of Radcliff is putting the former FFO building up for sale.

All information is expected to be ready by the end of this week, early next week to list the property.

Appraisal of the property came in at $800,000.

"The council has decided that we're going to do a sealed bid," Mayor J.J. Duvall said. "We hope to be closing that sometime in February."

There will be a reserve on the building of $500,000, meaning in order to be considered, bids must meet that minimum.

Once information on the property is released, with signage placed on the front of the building, and on the city's website, the city will accept sealed bids until the end of January.
