Apprentice from A-1

Hanshaw continued, “fire and EMS, together, are one of those jobs that you just kind of have to want to do. It’s not something that they kind of guide you in that direction in high school, like they do with nursing, doctors... things like that.”

He said it took him until after he graduated high school to realize that EMS was “a great fit for me.” But, he explained, programs like this can help these young people realize where they fit earlier, so they “can go on and do things at a higher level, and be able to make a great career out of it.”

Kara Williamson, business service consultant with Northeast Career Center, said the organization was glad to partner with the city of Olive Hill on the apprenticeships.

“These apprenticeships aren’t just about training,” she said. “They’re about creating good jobs right here at home. They allow our residents to stay close to their families, contribute to their community, and build long-term careers without having to leave the place they love.”

Olive Hill fire chief Jeremy Rodgers said the support from Northeast was important and appreciated.

“I’ve been a member (of the fire department) here for 30 years, and today, and in the last six months or so, we’ve taken steps that I never imagined that we would see within this small community.”

He said when you consider that, even with an all-volunteer system, it is a huge financial burden on a city to fund a department – with a cost of roughly $5,000 to kit out a firefighter, and 35 to 40 volunteers required to run a department – every dollar invested by a group like Northeast was beneficial.

Rodgers explained that Northeast was funding 50 percent of all salary and tuition costs for training associated with the apprenticeships, as well as the costs for personal protective equipment, certifications, etc. The other 50 percent was set to come from the city budget.

“That’s where we have to have the support of city council and the mayor,” Rodgers said.

Olive Hill city council member Tony Williams said the city was happy to provide their support, because it allowed them to extend and maintain city services at a discounted rate.

Just as important as the cost savings, though, was supporting the fire department’s needs, Williams said.

“I’ve sang their praises many times,” he said. “I’ve lived all over Kentucky. I’ve lived in Tennessee. And I’ve not seen a department (like this one). You can’t get a paid department to do what they do, what they’ve done, as volunteers here. Anything that’s going to help them, we’re going to help them.”

Rodgers said he couldn’t take credit for the project, though, just for helping raise awareness of it.

“Josh Thompson, the supervisor at the water plant, had the first (apprentice), and found out about the program basically by luck,” Rodgers said. Thompson pointed Rodgers and Olive Hill police chief Bruce Palmer in the direction of Northeast, and they reached out to them as well.

“We contacted the ladies at the Northeast office, and they were all about it,” Rodgers said. “So, they came down and we met about it. We gave them kind of the ground rules that we have to follow to certify people, and then they laid out the program.”

“We appreciate the work that has been put in by all of the staff, through Northeast and the career center,” Rodgers added. “Because they took the bits and pieces that I threw at them and developed what needed to be officially done for this program to be successful in the future. So, we’re excited. We look for it to grow, and for all of these young people to be able to start a career here that, hopefully, will be like myself, and like Levi, and Chief Palmer... and turn it into a career.”

Palmer said he will also be taking advantage of the assistance Northeast offers, but because of the certification requirements for police officers, that program will look slightly different.

Fiscal court holds special session to accept excavator bids

By Charles Romans
Carter County Times

The Carter County fiscal court held a special session last month to discuss either the repair or the replacement of a Kubota excavator. The excavator in question is approximately ten years old, and judge executive Brandon Burton informed the court that it had broken down again. The current issue, a pump system according to a mechanic’s estimate, is the most recent maintenance issue for the excavator. The current repair is estimated to cost approximately $20,000 to complete.

Any significant repair to large equipment like the excavator is typically a ‘high ticket’ repair, so numerous major issues can quickly add up to the point that it becomes more cost effective to replace the equipment in question. Judge Burton broached the subject of trading the excavator in on a new model, and asked the court their opinion on getting a trade-in quote. Burton also mentioned that the court might get a better trade-in by trading the Kubota brand excavator in on a new Kubota, but that was not guaranteed.

The court voted to begin the process of accepting bids on replacing the excavator. Bids will be accepted until May 19, at 3 pm. Bids will be accepted from multiple equipment dealerships, including Kubota, with the intent of using the 10-year-old excavator as a trade-in against the price of the new purchase.

three blood meals for survival during its lifetime. It is most active during April through August.

There are several effective precautions to take to lower your chances of getting a tick bite. Wear a repellent. One repellent containing permethrin can be put on clothing and is particularly effective. Avoid walking through uncut fields or brush and areas with tall vegetation where ticks are most likely to occur. Wear light-colored clothing so ticks are easy to spot. If you are spending a significant amount of time hiking or pursuing other outdoor activities in a tick-prone area, check yourself, your children and other family members for ticks when returning home. Check pets when they come in from outdoors. Common places that you will find ticks are behind ears, hair, neck, legs and around the waist.

If you find a tick on your body, remove it by using fine-tipped tweezers, getting as close to the skin as possible to make sure the entire tick is removed. Once it’s removed, you should wash the bite area and your hands and apply an antiseptic to the bite site.

The University of Kentucky Cooperative Extension Service is offering a free webinar event on May 29th at 6:00 PM focused on "Living with Alpha-gal Syndrome". This webinar aims to educate attendees on the basics of AGS, as well as strategies for tick bite prevention and diet and lifestyle management. The session will also include a Q&A segment, providing an opportunity for participants to get their questions answered by experts. Register now at www.ukfcs.net/AgS.
