

VENDORS,

County BPW.

Sue Foley, with the Homemakers, said the active group “is always busy finding great ways to give back to the community, learn new things, enjoy fellowship and promote Russell County,” and their newest venture “involves taking on the organization of the Vendors Fair formerly ran by the Russell County BPW.”

Booth spaces are still available for the Vendors Fair, which will be held this Saturday, April 26, 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the Russell County Auditorium/Natorium.

Booth spaces are $25 each, and “the same atmosphere, rules and cost will apply as when under the BPW,” Foley said.

Anyone interested in setting up a booth can e-mail Sue Foley at safoley@duo-county.com, Barb Sharpe at bsharpe@bankofjamestown.com or Melonie Eubank at seubank@duo-county.com.

Striving to be an integral part of the community in which they serve, the Homemakers offer “something for everyone,” Foley said.

“If you are a crafter you might want to look into joining the Crafty Bees,” she said. “Maybe you prefer to check out the area restaurants and attractions, then Homemakers on the Go might be the club for you. Homemakers at Heart is another club that might interest you, if you are interested in learning a variety of domestic and cooking techniques. If you are interested in quilting the Homemakers have a club for that, too. The Russell Springs Piecemakers Quilt Guild offers the opportunity to advance your quilting skills, make donation quilts for the community or just work on your personal projects. The Sunset Club is a group that meets for traditional homemaker meetings. They discuss a wide variety of relevant topics, enjoy fellowship and expand their homemaking skills.”

“So really, there are so many ways to get involved while making a difference in the community,” she said, “such as providing cheerful goody bags to nursing home residents and veterans, or contributing to the local food pantry.”

“Other ways of making a difference is contributing to Toys for Tots, providing Grab-n-Go bags for EMS, state and county road crews, contributing to the Warm the Children program or working on no sew blankets to donate to the Children’s Advocacy Center,” Foley said.

Homemakers also award a scholarship to a deserving college student.

The Homemakers always welcome new members and anyone interested in becoming a Russell County Extension Homemaker or joining any of the clubs stop by the Russell County Extension Office at 2688 U.S. 127 or call (270) 866-4477.
