

Stepping Stones program seeking wig donations

SUBMITTED CONTENT

ASHLAND The cosmetology program at Ashland Community and Technical College (ACTC) is seeking wig donations in support of their Stepping Stones program.

The Stepping Stones program exists to provide local cancer patients who have suffered hair loss through chemotherapy with wigs free of charge. The program was launched in 2002 by former cosmetology program coordinator Patti Banfield, resulting in hundreds of wigs being provided over the years to those in need.

The cosmetology program at Ashland Community and Technical College (ACTC) is seeking wig donations in support of their Stepping Stones program.

“Stepping Stones is a wonderful example of how the generosity of our community can make a meaningful difference in someone’s life,” said

Kim Jones, ACTC advancement administrator. “By donating a wig, individuals are helping ensure that local cancer patients have access to a resource that can help restore confidence and provide a sense of normalcy during a challenging time.”

“Cancer is such a heartbreaking disease,” said Mourine Smith, ACTC cosmetology program coordinator. “Being able to provide a wig at no cost gives our students an opportunity to serve their community while helping patients feel more comfortable and confident through their treatment journey.”

Wigs can be dropped off at the ACTC Foundation Office, located on the College Drive Campus.

The Wedding

To the wedding I wasn't invited
The vows I won't hear being recited,
And later when the women are crying
I won't be there lying.
I won't be an honored guest
Watching a new couple starting their quest,
I won't be there cheering
As to the many vows all will be hearing.
I won't be in a suit and tie
I won't be there with a date who will cry,
As the couple takes their vows
Unto each other spiritually they give their bows.
I won't hear them say, "I Do!"
As a new life begin for the two,
As I would hope and pray that they are luckier than I was
When I was once, maybe twice in love.
Though I know the groom

Soon he will be manning the broom,
As he looks over his shoulder
The wedding is now over.
I won't see the bride dressed in white
The vows I won't hear them recite,
My attendance wasn't even thought about or suggested
My presence wasn't even requested.
I won't be holding a bag of rice
And I won't be given a drink with ice,
I won't see or hear the tears many will be shedding
Because, I wasn't invited to the wedding.

The Streets of Japan

As I walk the streets of Japan
Though I am not a native man,
At myself no one does point or does stare

There is not racism or bigotry in the air.
I speak English and my skin is white
Me they do not hate or want to fight,
I also wear a crucifix around my neck
They give me no odd looks or disrespect.
I walked among the Buddhists and the Muslims here
There is no hate and no fear,
Out of hate no one asks me where I'm from
They are happy that I had come.

Their language I also cannot speak or read
If I wanted to in either pleasure or need,
Menus and the people already know my language
There is no confusion or communication anguish.
