

Louder than life

Anyone brave enough to tackle a four-day music festival?

Some of you might be starting that exact adventure today with Louder Than Life at the Kentucky Expo Center in Louisville.

I have a trio of three-day rock music festivals under my belt — Rock on the Range (now called Sonic Temple) in 2011 and 2013, and Chicago Open Air in 2016.

AARON SNYDER

We had a blast at each one, but recovery time noticeably worsened as I aged. Now, 10 years later, I'm wondering if I could handle four days of mayhem (I'd give it a try if ticket prices and time allowed).

Festivals bring many benefits. You can see a ton of bands in the same weekend. I've crossed a number of "bucket-list" bands off over the years by witnessing some leviathan lineups.

For instance, looking at the 197 bands on the Louder Than Life ticket for this weekend, I've seen 20 of them.

If you're going, follow the Louder Than Life Facebook page, where there's plenty of great advice and tips to heed when preparing for this type of event.

I'll say this ... if you plan to improperly hydrate (you know what I mean), you better plan to properly hydrate, too.

If you're going to be in the northeast Kentucky area this weekend, check out Poage Landing Days. A lot of talent will be on display on the Armstrong and 16th Street stages Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

A story on Poage Landing Days appeared earlier this week.

Rock on, readers.
