Hardin files for Governor

SUBMITTED

Rick Hardin, Commonwealth's Attorney for Kentucky's 46th Judicial Circuit, has filed to run for Governor of Kentucky, announcing a campaign focused on fundamentally changing the relationship between the people, their government, and the institutions that control it.

Rick Hardin

Hardin practiced law for 11 years, primarily in Hardinsburg, Ky., before being elected Commonwealth's Attorney in 2018. A Louisville native, he has lived in Meade and Grayson counties for the past 17 years.

"I feel comfortable in both our cities and rural communities. I began working in Louisville at the age of 14, worked my way through college in Lexington, and graduated from the University of Kentucky with degrees in Political Science and Psychology. I've spent much of my adult life living and working with the people of rural Kentucky. I understand that while our communities may be different, our concerns are often the same," Hardin said.

Hardin believes Kentucky's problems cannot be solved by simply changing the individuals occupying public office.

"For decades, Republicans and Democrats have promised to fix Kentucky's problems," he said. "Yet the government continues to grow, the cost of living continues to rise, and ordinary Kentuckians continue to pay the price."

Hardin's campaign centers on five major reforms designed to return economic and political power to Kentucky citizens:

• Eliminate Property and Income Taxes: Replace the existing tax structure with a simplified transaction-based system that eliminates taxes on individual income and property, creating more spending power for Kentucky families and businesses.

• Reform Kentucky's Education System: Redirect education funding toward individual students and families, giving parents greater control over educational opportunities, while prioritizing teachers and students over administration.

• Separate Corporations and State: End government favoritism and direct corporate subsidies while creating a business-friendly environment where corporations pay no state taxes on profits or property. Businesses
