

Greensburg Village, seen here in 1991, has been home to countless Green Countians during its 44 years.

The making of Greensburg Village

When Greensburg Village opened in 1982, it represented more than a new housing complex. It was the result of months of planning, cooperation, and a shared belief that Green County's older residents deserved safe, dignified, and affordable homes. The idea first took shape in early 1981, when city and county leaders began reviewing plans for a 50 unit senior housing development designed to blend into the surrounding neighborhood. The proposal called for 12 residential buildings, a community building, and landscape that would create a quiet, residential atmosphere.

Mayor Bill Taylor and County Judge-Executive Billy Shuffett led the effort, working to secure federal funding through the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development's Section 202 program. Local housing officials emphasized the need for such a development, noting that many older residents were living in inadequate conditions. Audrey Hancock, Director of the Greensburg Housing Authority, later explained that the project would be "a great asset for our people, especially those on fixed income."

ed state and federal officials for the groundbreaking ceremony. The event marked the beginning of the first HUD 202 senior housing project ever approved within the Lake Cumberland region. Representatives from HUD, the Lake Cumberland Housing Agency, and regional development offices joined local leaders as Taylor and Shuffett turned the first shovels of dirt, officially launching the construction phase. The land was purchased from Vic and Ann Griffiths.

Progress moved quickly. By late fall, many of the buildings were already under roof. The project, built by FIE Construction Company of Somerset at a cost of approximately $1.17 million, included one story units arranged across six acres off Autumn Drive. The low density design created a peaceful and attractive setting with winding roads and landscaped green space.

Greensburg Village was designed to be more than a collection of apartments. Each unit included emergency call buttons monitored around the clock, and the overall plan incorporated transportation services, on site meals, recreational activities, garden plots, and coordination with local agencies for home health and housekeeping assistance. Hancock emphasized that these features would help residents "live independently for a longer period of time," which was a central goal of the project.

Applications opened on April 19, 1982, with income limits set to ensure affordability for seniors and adults with disabilities. By mid-August, Greensburg Village officially opened its doors, offering one bedroom ground level apartments, free water and garbage service, laundry facilities, and a community room for social gatherings.

As the first residents settled in, Greensburg Village quickly proved to be exactly what its planners envisioned: a safe, welcoming place where older adults could maintain independence while staying connected to their community. More than four decades later, its creation remains a reminder of what Green County can accomplish when leaders, agencies, and citizens work together toward a shared purpose.
