Herrington Lake Conservation League will hold annual meeting April 16

The Herrington Lake Conservation League will hold its annual Town Hall Meeting on Thursday, April 16, at Kamp Kennedy Marina (4646 Kennedy Bridge Road, Lancaster) at 6 p.m.

Everyone is welcome, the Conservation League said in a Facebook post.

The Herrington Lake Conservation League is a 501(c)(3) nonprofit organization. According to its website, the league was established in 2001 by homeowners tired of man-made debris and trash on the lake. The organization is independent of any commercial enterprise and government agencies and is governed, managed and staffed exclusively by volunteers.

The conservation league is the only entity, public or private, dedicated solely to improving Herrington Lake.

"Our efforts are to educate, direct and finance the cleanup efforts on Herrington Lake," the organization said on its website.

Beth Boursaw serves as president, while Tona Tudor serves as secretary and Gay Allender serves as treasurer. Board members include Sam Dick, Scott McKinney, Greg Wilson and Cathy Sparks, according to the website.

Lewis Butler Herrington began planning to build a hydroelectric generating station back in 1910. In addition to providing electricity, Herrington and the other planners hoped the dam and reservoir would also help mitigate flooding on the Kentucky River.

Construction on Dix Dam began in 1923. Progress on the $7 million project was reported in newspapers across the Eastern United States, according to "Herrington Lake: Kentucky's Marvel of Architecture, Waterpower and Nature" by Mike Holdren.

Impoundment of water began in 1925, and when the project was completed in 1927, Dix Dam was the largest rock-filled dam in the world, according to Holdren.

Herrington Lake stretches 1,087 feet across the Dix River Gorge between Mercer and Garrard Counties. The deepest lake in Kentucky, Herrington Lake reaches depths of 249 feet at its deepest. The lake is about 35 miles long, up to 1,200 feet wide, and covers 2335 acres with 325 miles of shoreline.

In addition to power generation and flood mitigation, the lake is today a huge driver of tourism. Not long after the Dix Dam's completion, the lake began to attract tourists, both Kentuckians and travelers from other states, who began flocking to the banks of Herrington Lake for boating, fishing and swimming, and other recreational activities, including picnicking, hiking and nature watching.

Today Lake Herrington is known as the home of some of the best fishing in Kentucky, stocked with bluegill, catfish, crappie, and several varieties of bass.

Annual membership dues and donations to the Herrington Lake Conservation League go to cleanup and operating costs.

In addition to community cleanups, the organization provides assistance to lakeside homeowners with removing trees, styrofoam and dead docks that may wash up.

New KU energy efficiency programs for residential, business customers

Louisville Gas and Electric Company and Kentucky Utilities Company have announced two energy efficiency programs, one brand new and one returning favorite, designed to help customers save energy, money and time.

The programs are: Appliance Recycling and Business Midstream Lighting

In the Appliance Recycling program, residential and small business customers can get a $50 incentive when they let LG&E and KU pick up functioning inefficient refrigerators and freezers and safely dispose of and recycle them.

In the Business Midstream Lighting program, eligible business customers can get incentives at the point of purchase when they buy qualified lighting equipment from participating distributors.

The programs build on LG&E and KU's efforts to help customers use energy wisely, as well as helping the utilities reduce overall energy demand, increasing reliability and affordability across the board.

"We're proud to empower our customers to take advantage of these new and exciting programs," said Shannon Montgomery, LG&E and KU vice president of Customer Services. "We're constantly working to introduce energy efficiency programs that make saving energy and earning incentives easy and straightforward for our customers."

In a press release, the corporation said customers, who loved past versions of the Appliance Recycling program and recycled around 66,000 appliances, earning over $3 million in incentives between 2012 and 2018. Appliance Recycling and the new Business Midstream Lighting Program add to LG&E and KU's extensive energy-efficiency toolbox and will help create an easy and hassle-free experience for customers making smart energy decisions.

LG&E and KU first launched energy efficiency programs for customers in the early 1990s, and in 2024, started rolling out the largest suite of programs in the company's history, including incentives for energy-saving improvements and offsetting costs for new, smart technologies.

Customers can sign up for Appliance Recycling at lge-ku.clearesult.com or by logging into their online My Account (my.lge-ku.com). Customers interested in the Business Midstream Lighting Program can learn more at lge-ku-business.clearesult.com/midstream/ or through My Account.
