and red or watery eyes. Tiny white spots may appear inside the mouth two to three days after symptoms begin. A red rash generally develops three to five days after symptoms begin, often starting on the face or at the hair line then spreading downward to the rest of the body.

The CDC reports possible complications in children such as ear infections or diarrhea occurring in 1 of every 10 children with measles.

Children typically receive their first MMR vaccine dose between 12 and 15 months of age and a second dose between 4 and 6 years old. Adults who received only one dose or are unsure of their vaccination status may need another dose. Especially adults with weakened immune systems.

Two doses of the MMR vaccine are about 97% effective at preventing measles.

Health officials encourage Kentuckians to check with their health care provider or local health department if they are unsure whether they or their children are up to date on vaccinations.
