the heck out of us," Miller said.

FIU's pressure gave Murray State problems early, and the Racers struggled to find a consistent rhythm offensively. The Panthers took a 42-37 lead into halftime and extended that advantage to 11 points with 12:59 remaining in the game.

Miller wasn't pleased with how his team handled the opening half, grading the performance well below the standard he expects.

"I give it a level three, three-and-a-half performance the first half. Level five is our championship level. Level one is, you know, not very good at all. So we were probably a three-and-a-half. Well, it's not good enough," Miller said.

He credited FIU's physicality and defensive pressure for making life difficult on the Racers.

"The first half we were just really stagnant offensively, and their pressure, give them credit, their pressure really took us off balance and really put us on our heels offensively and defensively to a certain degree too," Miller said.

The Panthers also made things difficult on the glass, an area Miller said Murray State needs to improve. Even with those struggles, the Racers found a way to respond when the game was slipping away.

Murray State began chipping away at the deficit behind contributions from across the lineup. Talis Soulhac provided an offensive spark, while Jonas Boulefaa found success attacking the basket. Kaden Magwood added a three-pointer and an and-one during the second-half push, helping the Racers regain their footing.

Murray State eventually put together a 16-3 run to turn the deficit into a 65-63 lead with 8:55 remaining.

Miller said the response was one of the most encouraging parts of the night, especially with the game presenting situations his team had not yet experienced together.

"We got down 11 with 12:59 left, and our guys really responded and came together, which you really like to see," Miller said.

He also pointed to the leadership of Ben Shtolzberg and Brigham Rogers, who helped keep the team together during its huddles as FIU built its lead.

"Our guys, to our credit, they could have laid down, and they really came together. And we had some great leadership, Ben Shtolzberg, Brigham Rogers. Those guys really led a lot of our huddles," Miller said.

That leadership helped Murray State settle in during the closing stretch, when Domon took charge offensively.

Domon finished with 29 points and nine rebounds, repeatedly drawing contact and getting to the free-throw line. He went 21-of-24 at the stripe, giving the Racers a reliable source of points as FIU tried to make another push late in the game.

Miller said getting to the line is a key part of what Murray State wants to do offensively.

"We try to go, we try to, you know, win a lot of games at the free throw line with our aggressiveness and our assertiveness," Miller said.

Domon also made an impact beyond his scoring. Miller highlighted a late defensive possession in which Domon contested a three-pointer before fighting through traffic to grab the rebound.

"I mean, Roman contested a three once towards the end of the game, contested a three, and there was like four or five guys in the paint. He contested a three, then came in and snatched the rebound over everybody. We need more of that," Miller said.

Brigham Rogers also finished with nine rebounds and two steals, while recording another strong effort on the glass. Christian Jones added 11 points, and Magwood finished with 10 points and four rebounds, including two on the offensive end.

Miller said Magwood's ability to contribute beyond scoring was another positive to take from the game.

"So he can really score, but he had also four rebounds, two offense, two defense. So he impacted the game other than the scoring tonight, which is awesome to see," Miller said.

Despite the comeback and the final result, Miller knows the Racers have work to do. Murray State needs to take better care of the ball, improve its rebounding and sharpen its execution as it gets closer to the start of the season.

"We have to do a better job taking care of the ball. They killed us on the offensive glass. We didn't do our job rebounding," Miller said.

The Racers also used the exhibition to experiment with different lineups and situations, giving the coaching staff a better look at how the roster responds when games get difficult. Miller said the team has spent much of the preseason emphasizing defense as a way to establish its identity and tempo.

The win was encouraging, but the challenge ahead is only getting bigger. Murray State enters the season with expectations after being picked first in the Missouri Valley Conference preseason poll, something Miller knows will bring extra attention from opponents.

"We have a bullseye on our back the size of Texas," Miller said.

For Miller, Thursday's game was a chance to learn from adversity before the results begin to count. The Racers will look to clean up the mistakes, build on their second-half response and be better prepared for the challenges waiting in the regular season.

"It's good to have adversity right now, so we can know how to handle it when it's coming, because it's coming sooner than later," Miller said.

Murray State opens the regular season on Monday, November 2 against Tennessee State.
