Bringing History to Life

Herald Report

Tollesboro Elementary fifth graders brought history to life with an exciting debate—

Federalists vs. Loyalists!

Students stepped into the roles of historical figures who played a part in America's fight for freedom from Great Britain, making the past come alive in a fun and engaging way.

Agriculture Education Week Reaches Lewis County Third Graders

Herald Report

During Kentucky Agriculture Education Week, Lewis County Agriculture and Natural Resources Agent Kennedy Cannon provided hands-on agricultural education to 145 third-grade students across the county. The program focused on increasing students' understanding of Kentucky agriculture, including top crops, livestock production, and where their food comes from.

Through interactive lessons and activities, students explored how agriculture impacts their daily lives and learned about the wide variety of careers within the industry. While Lewis County is a rural community, many students have limited direct exposure to production agriculture, making early education efforts especially important.

tended to Lewis County Schools and its teachers for welcoming Extension into their classrooms and supporting agricultural education efforts.

Programs like Agriculture Education Week help build agricultural literacy at a young age while fostering an appreciation for the farmers and agricultural professionals who support our communities every day.

Preparing for the Future

Herald Report

Eighth graders at Lewis County Middle School spent time last week preparing for their future!

On Wednesday, they attended the Reality Store. The Reality Store simulates real-world budgeting and career consequences. Students were assigned a career, salary, and family size, then had to visit various stations to pay for housing, utilities, childcare, and food, aiming to manage their money without overspending.

On Thursday, LCCTC students set up various interactive stations for 8th grade students to see what choices they would have next year.

Lewis County 4-H Teams Up With Sheriff's Office to Teach Cyber Safety

Herald Report

Lewis County 4-H recently partnered with the Lewis County Sheriff's Office to bring an important message to every 6th grader in the county—how to stay safe in today's digital world.

CCSO/Chaplain Johnny Byard visited classrooms and talked with students about cyber safety, social media, and the growing role of artificial intelligence (AI). The conversations were interactive and easy to relate to, helping students but important ways to protect themselves online, like keeping personal information private, spotting scams, and knowing what to do if they encounter cyberbullying. CCSO/Chaplain Byard also introduced the basics of AI, helping students better understand what it is and how to use it responsibly.

For many students, this was a chance to ask questions and hear real-life examples, making the information feel practical and relevant. As more young habits from the start.

By reaching all 6th grade classes in Lewis County, the program made sure every student received the same valuable information. It also strengthened the connection between youth and local law enforcement in a positive way.

Lewis County 4-H would like to extend a sincere thank you to CCSO/Chaplain Johnny Byard and the Lewis County Sheriff's Office for their time and dedication—we can't thank you
