MLB's 2027 season threatened with lockout looming

NEW YORK — When Jake Bauers gloved the final out of the Milwaukee Brewers' first World Series triumph, it might have ended the last Major League Baseball game for a long time.

While just 148 days remain until the scheduled start of the 2027 season on March 24, owners have proposed a salary cap for the first time since their 1994 plan led to a 7 1/2-month strike and the first cancellation of the World Series in 90 years.

"Obviously, you'd love to see the game be in a good spot and continue to be played," Milwaukee captain Christian Yelich said Wednesday a few hours before his team finished a five-game victory over Tampa Bay. "I think the game's in a great spot right now with a lot of people tuned in, a lot of popularity, a lot of great players out there. It would obviously be a shame if we miss time, but we'll have plenty of time this offseason to talk about it."

FREE AGENT FRENZY POSSIBLE AHEAD OF LOCKOUT

Baseball's five-year labor contract, agreed to in March 2022 on the 99th day of a management lockout, expires on Dec. 1. MLB is likely to lock out players again as soon as the deal expires.

That could create another free-agent frenzy ahead of the expiration. On Dec. 1, 2021, clubs committed to $1.4 billion in salaries that included nine-figure contracts for Javier Báez, Byron Buxton, Kevin Gausman, Max Scherzer, Corey Seager and Marcus Semien.

This year's free-agent class is headed by Tarik Skubal, Freddy Peralta, Michael King, Seiya Suzuki and Randy Arozarena. There were 144 new free agents Thursday and several dozen more can go free by Monday.

PLAYERS SAY CAP PROPOSAL IS A NON-STARTER

While the sides have been negotiating since May, there is no common ground on the primary economic issues.

Management wants a cap and a floor that would cut down disparity in payrolls along with restricting a player to at most 15% of his team's payroll.

Players want expanded free agency and salary arbitration rights along with almost doubling the major league minimum, increasing the money high-revenue teams share with the less-wealthy clubs and imposing a tax on teams that fail to keep their payrolls at a certain level.

Brewers fans flood streets for a World Series victory celebration

MILWAUKEE — It was only fitting that the Milwaukee Brewers celebrated their first World Series title with a beer-soaked celebration worthy of their name.

"We've had way too many parade beers," team captain and designated hitter Christian Yelich said Friday at a rally that capped a day-long party with fans. "I took the trophy to the face, got a black eye. It's all worth it. It's for you guys. We should celebrate forever."

The small-market Brewers gave their long-suffering fans the championship they had been waiting for with a 4-1 win over the Tampa Bay Rays on Wednesday, clinching the Series in five games. It was their first time playing in the Fall Classic in 44 years.

That long wait made Friday's celebration that much sweeter.

"Unbelievable," said parade attendee Mark Diedrich, a 76-year-old from who has been an on-and-off partial season ticket holder since the 1980s. "You just never thought it would happen. But it did."

Milwaukee Brewers' fans raise their hands as they pose for a selfie during a rally at the baseball team's World Series parade Friday in Milwaukee.

Before the rally at American Family Insurance Amphitheater near the shore of Lake Michigan, the Brewers held a parade through downtown Milwaukee. Exuberant fans flooded the streets, watched from parking garages and cheered from office building windows.

Milwaukee police estimated that over 750,000 attended the parade or rally, well above their initial expectations of about 400,000.

"That was incredible — incredible," manager Pat Murphy said. "I kept thinking I saw the same people over and over, and we were just going in a circle. There's no way there's that many people who live here."

Then came a rally that featured World Series MVP William Contreras joining in on the fans' "MVP" chants.

"We win the trophy for you guys, for the city," Contreras said.
