

GOP bill would end free tuition for older Kentuckians

FRANKFORT — For 50 years the legislature has waived tuition and fees at public universities and colleges for Kentuckians who have passed their 65th birthdays.

That would end if the chair of the House Standing Committee on Postsecondary Education has his way.

Rep. James Tipton, R-Taylorsville, is sponsoring House Bill 497 which would repeal the 1976 law that created the waiver that benefits Donovan Scholars and other students who are 65 or older.

Herman L. Donovan, a champion of lifelong learning, was president of the University of Kentucky from 1941 to 1956 and before that president of what's now Eastern Kentucky University. UK and other institutions have named the tuition benefit in his honor.

The prospect of seniors losing free access to public higher education is not sitting well with some, including Nathan Goldman, chair of the University of Louisville Donovan Scholars, a campus club. The club last week sent out an alert urging people to contact their lawmakers to oppose the bill.

Tipton in an interview last week with the Lantern emphasized that universities and colleges could still waive tuition for older students if they chose after his bill becomes law. But the committee chair questioned the value of supporting higher education for seniors: "Are they going out and getting a job? Are they contributing to the economic success of the state, and is it fair for the taxpayers of Kentucky to be paying that bill?"

'EDUCATION IS A LIFE PROCESS'

In the 1950's, University of Kentucky President, Herman L. Donovan attended a seminar with pioneering leaders in gerontology. He became a strong advocate of higher education for retired persons. "Intellectual life cannot be ignored," he said. "Education is a life process."

In 1964, on the recommendation of then UK President John Oswald, the Board of Trustees approved the Herman L. Donovan Scholarship for Senior Citizens, waiving tuition for adults 65 and older.

University of Kentucky President Herman L. Donovan raised purebred cattle at Battlefield Stock Farm near Richmond. He also championed lifelong learning. Donovan Scholarships for Kentuckians who are 65 or older are named in his honor.

Donovan Scholars, ranging from 65 to 84 joined traditional UK students on campus for the first time. In 1967, Amanda Hicks became the first Donovan Scholar to receive a degree.

In 1975, Alfred D.G. Arthurs became the first to earn a Ph.D.

The program gained national attention in 1966 in a TIME magazine article, resulting in inquiries from across the nation and abroad.

In 1976, the Kentucky General Assembly expanded UK's program by mandating that residents of the commonwealth, aged 65 or older, receive a tuition waiver for academic classes at all state-supported institutions of higher learning.

"You know what? I'm 66 right now. I could go to college tuition free, but I don't think it's fair for me to do that to the taxpayers on their dime. If I want to do it, I can pay for it," Tipton said.

Goldman, the U of L student, doubts the waiver poses a hardship on taxpayers or the institutions. "If a lot of people were taking advantage of it, it might be a burden on the schools, but I don't think that's the case," Goldman told the Lantern.

Seniors can take courses for free only if there's room in the class. Universities are not required to add classes to accommodate them.

The Donovan Scholars club at UofL has "maybe 100 members," Goldman said.

At the University of Kentucky, 160 Donovan Scholars are enrolled this semester, down from 185 in fall 2025 — out of a total enrollment of more than 38,000.

UK and UL last week told the Lantern they are still analyzing the bill's impact.

SURVIVOR WAIVERS WOULD BECOME 'LAST-DOLLAR SCHOLARSHIPS'

Elders are far from the only group the legislature has given tuition waivers through the years.

Among the eligible are children and spouses of disabled military veterans and law enforcement officers and firefighters who have been killed or disabled in the line of duty. Tipton's HB 497 requires those groups to tap available state and federal financial aid and converts their waivers to "last-dollar scholarships" that would cover tuition and fees not paid for by other sources.

"The student shall complete the Free Application for Federal Student Aid to determine the level of need and eligibility for state and federal financial aid programs," the bill says.

Tipton said the universities asked him to make the changes in tuition waivers for survivors and that the bill would save the institutions $30 million a year.

He said no universities asked him to end the waiver for students 65 and older but "they've seen the bill, and nobody has complained to me about it." He said that by the time the bill goes to committee he will have an estimate on possible savings from ending the waiver for people over 65.

Tipton last year successfully sponsored a bill that academics warned would erode tenure protections for professors.

Democratic Gov. Andy Beshear vetoed the measure, saying it would "limit Kentucky's ability to hire the best people and threatens academic freedom."

The Republican legislature overrode the veto.

Agencies to be honored for animal advocacy

BY BRENT SCHANDING
THE NEWS-ENTERPRISE

Humane World for Animals is expected to present Humane Law Enforcement awards to several local agencies today for their responses in a high-profile animal torture case that's already spurring reform for cruelty cases across Kentucky.

Representatives from the animal advocacy group, formerly known as the Humane Society of the U.S., are expected to recognize Radcliff Police Department, Hardin County Animal Care & Control and the Hardin County Commonwealth Attorney's Office at 3:30 p.m. today during the Hardin County Fiscal Court meeting at the county government center in Elizabethtown.

The Humane Law Enforcement awards are presented annually to law enforcement agencies across the U.S. that demonstrate exemplary work in animal cruelty cases.

In November, a Hardin County court sentenced a Radcliff woman to six years for her role in the injuries and deaths of multiple dogs. The sentence was the harshest ever given in an animal cruelty case in Kentucky, and the ruling is already helping to set legal precedent for stiffer penalties for convicted animal abusers.

"This case reflects the power and cost of thorough animal cruelty investigations and prosecutions," a spokesperson for Hardin County said.

Humane World for Animals helped support the case here by funding necropsies to strengthen the evidentiary record and help ensure accountability.

Early reporting in the case highlighted necropsy findings as a key component of the investigation.

The case could also reform state laws to shield Kentucky taxpayers from bearing the high financial costs associated with prosecuting animal torture cases. About $300,000 was reportedly spent to prosecute the case.

"This case underscores the urgent need for cost of care legislation so that animals receive appropriate care while cases move through the courts, and so taxpayers are not left holding the bill," the spokesperson said.

advisor to the UofL Donovan Scholars club, said the loss of the waiver would hurt more than just older students who could no longer afford to be students.

"We're not talking about a huge number of people at any of our universities who are taking advantage of this. But for the ones who are, it's extremely important, and they have a 100% positive impact on the campus and on younger students. It's really a benefit for all of us."

She said the older students mentor younger students and take an active part in campus culture.

"Having senior citizen students in the classroom with 18- to 22-year-olds is an amazing opportunity for everyone. Younger students benefit from that. ... I've got a woman in one of my classes now who's in her 70s, and she sits with kids who are about 20 and shares her life experience and knowledge as it relates to the stuff we're talking about. She's been amazing. I've seen that happen many times in my time at U of L," said Mott, an associate professor in geography and environmental sciences.

She predicts that losing the waiver would force many of the older students out of higher education since many are living on fixed incomes and modest retirements.

As for Tipton's assertion that people over 65 won't be contributing to the economy, Mott said, "I guess in response to that I'd say they've contributed to the economy their entire adult lives."
