

Record heat impacting fishing in western U.S.

LIVINGSTON, Mont. — Trout need cool water to survive, but record heat this summer has driven water temperatures to lethal levels for fish.

Wildlife officials are banning fishing during certain hours on rivers and streams across the U.S. West, following an exceptionally dry winter and amid widespread drought. Lower water levels mean rivers can heat more rapidly.

The restrictions aim to reduce stress on species including highly-prized trout. Anglers travel from around the world to find the fish in Yellowstone National Park or Western Montana’s Blackfoot

River, featured in the movie “A River Runs Through It.”

On the Yellowstone River near Livingston, Montana, California resident Mike Wever waded into the swiftly-moving water Friday with a fly fishing rod in one hand. He dipped his free hand into the water.

“Not very cold,” said Wever, 62.

He lacked the customary waders that keep fly fishers warm. Instead, he wore shorts. Stepping carefully across a rocky side channel, Wever said he was OK with the decision to close stretches of the Yellowstone to fishing after 2 p.m. daily.

“It’s great for us to have this resource,” he said. “But we have to manage it.”

Many trout anglers let their catch swim free after netting it. But temperature-stressed rainbow or cutthroat trout can die if they’re out of water even briefly for a commemorative photo, experts say.

Colorado has imposed restrictions this summer on 19 rivers totaling 635.5 miles, a situation state officials say is unprecedented.

Yellowstone expanded afternoon fishing restrictions last week to the entire park.

Also, wildlife officials in neighboring Montana broadened afternoon fishing restrictions to now cover 1,200 miles of rivers.

Closures “have become very common over the last decade plus, some might even say very routine from late June through early September,” said biologist Adam Strainer, administrator of the fisheries division at Montana Fish Wildlife and Parks.

That trend coincides with rising temperatures as climate change warms the planet and droughts become more frequent and severe. Yellowstone, for example, has restricted fishing due to high water temperatures during five of the past six years. That’s much more often than in the past, according to park officials.

The consequences aren’t just ecological; trout fishing is closely entwined with the economy in many Rocky Mountain communities.

Dan Gigone, who runs Sweetwater Fly Shop along the Yellowstone River in Montana, says many visitors are pushing trips to the fall to avoid low and warm summer water flows.

“People are realizing August is a crapshoot here in terms of whether you’re going to be able to fish and how good the fishing will be,” Gigone said. “I’ve been here 22 years and this is the warmest stretch I remember.”

Warm water contains less oxygen, making it harder for fish to breathe. It also slows their growth.

Full reservoirs usually help buoy water levels during dry summers and low-water years, said Kirk Deeter with the conservation group Trout Unlimited. But many of those reservoirs are at near-record lows.

In Steamboat Springs where Deeter lives, drought and warm waters in the mid 70s killed a massive number of fish on the Yampa River.

“That’s a bad harbinger for the trout,” he said.

In 2016, wildlife officials closed 183 miles of the Yellowstone River to fishing, rafting and other activities to prevent a parasite suspected of killing tens of thousands of fish from spreading further in the low and warm water.

Turkey federation local chapter planning Aug. 15 event for kids

BY THE NEWS-ENTERPRISE
The Heartland Chapter of the National Wild Turkey Federation will be holding a free event next weekend to introduce young people to the outdoors.

Known as a JAKES (Juniors Acquiring Knowledge, Ethics & Sportsmanship) event, it is scheduled from 8 a.m. to noon Aug. 15 at Don’s Hunting Preserve, 7361 Hardinsburg Road, Cecilia.

Registration starts at 7:30 a.m.

Activities will include fishing, archery, clay-target shooting and NWTf inflatable BB-gun range. It is open at no charge to all youth 17 years old or younger.

Participants aged 9 to 17 also will have opportunity to acquire their hunter education certification (orange card), but must have completed the online portion of the class within 30 days of the event. T

This course is offered through the KDFWR website at fw.ky.gov. Adults accompanying their children also may acquire their orange card during the event, but the online portion of the event also is required first for everyone.

Firearms and ammunition, archer equipment, targets and fish bait will be provided. Participants are urged to bring fishing tackle, chairs and insect repellent.

Lunch will be provided at the conclusion of the event.

Those interested in participating or having questions about the JAKES day event should contact Lynn Shagool at 270-748-0882 or Justin Winingham at 270-219-2474. RSVPs to the same number are appreciated and help with planning.
