

Flora Fisher Allen proves education defines opportunities

After the Civil War, African Americans viewed education as a necessity – not only to secure their freedom long term – but to achieve economic independence and citizenship rights. They hoped it would be a tool to combat systemic racism which in turn would enable former slaves to transition from forced labor to better economic opportunities.

Born in 1875, Mary McLeod Bethune became a Black American educator from South Carolina who would later become a philanthropist, humanitarian, civil right activist and an active proponent of the education of African American girls and women. She established African American schools, started Black women’s organizations and eventually served as the first Black woman to lead a federal agency under President Franklin Roosevelt. But in 1920, early in her career, Bethune published a paper geared toward African Americans called “A Philosophy of Education for Negro Girls.”

She wrote: “For the past 70 years, the Negro has experienced various degrees of freedom. That which was given him in the early years of emancipation ... and that which today he must take.”

She firmly believed that a great deal of this new freedom rested upon the type of education which a Black woman would receive in the years to come.

When Mary Bethune penned this article in 1920, Flora Fisher was only 10 years old. It may have been much later before young Flora became aware of the fight for educational opportunities for Black women, but Flora’s instincts seem to get the message.

Born on April 21, 1910, Flora was the youngest daughter of Henry and Virginia Fisher. It is unclear when and where Flora received her early education. She could have attended the original Durham School that was short lived or she could have attended Lincoln Institute at Lincoln Ridge or Central High School in Louisville along with other Taylor County black students determined to continue a higher education.

But like Bethune, Flora and her family recognized how an education would enhance her future and the future of her children.

The July 25, 1929, edition of the Central Kentucky News-Journal reported that 19-year-old Flora Fisher was the new teacher for the Old Pitman Black school. The 1930 census likewise confirmed her profession as a teacher in Taylor County.

In August of 1930, the Taylor County Colored Teachers’ Association had been organized and Flora became the chairman of the program committee. In October of the same year, the CKNJ reported on the meeting of the Colored Teachers Association. Flora Fisher had taught a class on the “Best Method for Teaching English.”

In 1937, it was reported in the newspaper that the city school board had decided to build a high school (Durham) for Black students. Both Ruth Hodgen and Flora Fisher were re-elected as teachers.

By the 1940 census, Flora’s parents were deceased and she was living on Fisher Street in Campbellsville with several of her siblings and other family members. An interesting note captured by the census taker was that by 1940, Flora had completed two years of college. Later information known about Flora was that she was a graduate of Kentucky State College (now University) in Frankfort. By the 1950 census, Flora is married to Frank Allen.

In the history of Durham High School, Mrs. Flora Fisher Allen was spoken of highly. “The school was a family and each teacher assumed the role and was given the authority of a parent. The first prom was sponsored by Mr. Ivery and the music was a special feature given by Mrs. Allen who was also the choir director. Mrs. Allen’s talents appeared in every aspect of school life.”

The Durham High School

Song was also written by Flora Allen.

Flora Fisher Allen taught in the Campbellsville school system for more than 50 years, having moved from segregation to integration. Greatly loved by her students, Allen was named the Kiwanis Club and CKNJ Citizen of the Month in August 1978.

Allen had been a long member of First Baptist Church where she was a faithful pianist and choir director. She was a member of the Retired Teacher Association and Homemakers Club. She likewise continued teaching piano lessons until she became ill.

Allen was known as a remarkable woman who touched many lives. Her obituary read, “She was strong, yet gentle ... and had a special way that warmed the hearts of all who knew her.”

Flora Allen died in 2003 at the age of 92 and is buried with her husband, parents and siblings in the Odd Fellows Cemetery in Campbellsville.

History buffs visit the past during 2 events in E'town

When visitors entered Pritchard Community Center on Saturday, it was like taking a step back in time.

Two events in Elizabethtown hosted under one roof – the Bucksnot Longhunters 18th Century Market Fair and the Ancestral Trails Historical Society Book Fair – offered a history buff’s delight.

Vendors and guests dressed in 18th-century clothes and admired hand-crafted textiles, flintlock rifles and pelts, among other items.

Gary McCleash of Bardstown said he collects 18th-century items and came looking for gun parts and accessories from the time.

“This is kind of like a time period when (Daniel) Boone would come across through the Cumberland Gap to explore, survey the land,” McCleash said. “This is all the goods and stuff they would use when they came across. It’s important to keep our history alive in any way we can.”

Amanda Park said she was excited to look for history books to add to her shelf at home.

“Reading about history offers a better understand of what happened in the world,” Park said. “Reading requires active, critical thinking to evaluate information, making it more stimulating than passive, casual conversation.”

Park said she found a new book that caught her eye.

“‘The Pie Seller, The Drunk and the Lady’ by Terry Foody takes place in Lexington in 1833,” Park said. “It talks about the cholera epidemic that struck the new city. The history behind that is something I’ve always wanted to learn more about and now I can.”

Sarah Wilson said she supports the book fair because it’s important not to forget history.

“People have to understand history to better understand how we got here,” Wilson said. “It’s important for people to understand all types of history, because how can we move forward as a society if we don’t know how we got here in the first place?”
