W'burg Council discusses AEDs

Williamsburg may be getting an Automated External Defibrillator (AED) downtown.

The topic of AEDs came up during the Williamsburg City Council's monthly meeting Monday when City Councilwoman Chelsea Tyree inquired about whether the city had a publicly accessible one downtown.

"I don't believe we do. We have one other places but I don't think we have one downtown," replied Mayor Roddy Harrison, who added the city check into it.

Tyree said she wondered whether the stage at the Green Space on Main might be a good location.

Councilman Loren Connell suggested the city might want to check whether the fiscal court would be willing to help purchase an AED for downtown.
