retailers about the dangers the products can pose to children.

The Department for Public Health's HANDS program should update educational material to include safe storage of medical cannabis and hemp-derived cannabinoid products.

The Office of the Attorney General should work with law enforcement, medical providers and prosecutors to create a toolkit focused on pediatric ingestions.

The Office of the Attorney General, through the Prosecutors Advisory Council, should include a training focused on pediatric ingestions at the annual Kentucky Prosecutors Conference.

The Kentucky Hospital Association should include a training regarding pediatric ingestions at the 2026 Trauma and Emergency Medicine Symposium.

The Office for Children with Special Health Care Needs, in collaboration with the Department for Public Health, Department for Medicaid

Services, and the Kentucky Hospital Association, should develop a statewide patient registry to enable coordinated care across systems and assist in early identification of at-risk families.

'EVERYBODY'S PROBLEM'

While there are plenty of policies that could change and improve the child well-being landscape in Kentucky, Rabalais said everyone needs to be involved in preventing and stopping abuse.

"We should have watchful eyes all around these children," he said. "We're there to protect them, and we have to be their advocate. The neighbors and the brothers-in-law and the cousins — you know, a family who's got a problem kid? Go volunteer to help them find out what they need."

Parents and caregivers, too, need to reach out for help, Howard said, and that starts with realizing the "it takes a village" cliché is true, she said.

"Learning to ask for help is really hard, especially as a parent," she said. "We need to normalize the ask for help."

"We won't make a significant impact unless everyone takes this on, and expecting state government to fix it or Kosair (for Kids) to fix it... it's just not going to happen," Rabalais said. "This is not simply (on) state government. It's not simply parent organizations. It is not simply a Kosair for Kids problem. It's everybody's problem."

This story discusses child abuse. Report child abuse to Kentucky's Statewide Child Abuse Hotline at 1-877-597-233. Kentucky's poison control line is 800-222-1222.
