

There Are Many Ways Newspapers Can Benefit Children

Newspapers have long been part of the fabric of the communities they cover and serve. Whether it’s a big-city daily tabloid or a small town weekly, newspapers keep readers and residents up-to-date on the latest goings-on in their communities and across the globe.

Newspapers have been linked to a range of benefits for adults that include greater civic engagement and stronger voter turnout. Such benefits are indispensable, and it’s equally important to recognize ways in which newspapers benefit children.

Reading and discussing newspaper stories can foster stronger language development. A 2022 study published in the International Journal of Environmental Research and Public Health noted that parents who provide newspapers at home for their children to read and then discuss stories with young readers can help kids develop strong language skills, which could ultimately benefit them in the classroom and in their personal interactions. The study also noted that discussing newspaper stories with youngsters creates opportunities for children to explore their thoughts. Newspapers can help children develop their critical thinking skills. A meta-analysis examining ways to teach students critical thinking skills published in the Review of Educational Research noted that critical thinking skills are vital because they bolster students’ ability to interpret, analyze, evaluate, and make inferences. Newspapers are an invaluable resource for educators aiming to bolster kids’ critical thinking skills, as they can be used to teach students to recognize why stories were written, how information in a given story was learned and gathered and how to verify information in a news story. Each of those lessons requires interpretation, analysis and evaluation, ultimately instilling in students vital critical thinking skills that can serve them in the classroom and beyond. Newspapers help students develop vital communication skills. A 2024 study published in the Elementaria Journal of Educational Research found that reading newspapers helped student participants in the study improve their vocabulary, enhance their writing skills and more effectively articulate their ideas. Authors behind the study ultimately characterized newspapers as valuable educational tools, a conclusion that has been reached by researchers across a range of academic disciplines.

Newspapers are part of the fabric of the communities they cover, and children have much to gain from being granted access to their local papers in the classroom and at home.

Bring The World To Your Backyard As A Global Exchange Host

Every summer, Kentucky 4-H families open their doors to a world of new cultural experiences as hosts for the States’ 4-H International Exchange Program. In 2025, hosting families across the state welcomed 37 visiting youth and chaperones from Taiwan, Korea, and Japan for a four-week, culturally immersive experience. Organizers are currently inviting Kentucky households to share their hospitality with a new group of adventurous young travelers from the same countries in 2026.

Why do 4-H families volunteer to host? Although the visitors stay for four weeks, the benefits of serving as a host family last well beyond the time when they wave goodbye to their international guests.

“The goal of Kentucky 4-H is to give youth the opportunity to find what sparks their interests,” said Chuck Stamper, Extension 4-H specialist and Kentucky international programs coordinator. “Being a host family allows Kentucky 4-Hers to be ‘Beyond Ready’ to live in a global world.”

Most participating families are motivated to join by these five rewarding opportunities:

1. Experience a new culture without leaving home.

Hosting an exchange delegate brings the world to your doorstep. Your family can learn about new traditions, foods and perspectives firsthand—an enriching experience for everyone.

2. Build lifelong friendships.

4-H International Exchange programs often create bonds that last a lifetime. Many host families stay connected with their students long after the summer ends, forming an international network of friends.

3. Teach and learn together.

Your family can share your own culture while learning about others. It’s a two-way exchange that fosters understanding, empathy and global awareness—an especially valuable experience for young minds.

4. Make a positive impact.

Hosting gives a young person the chance to experience life in a new country, practice language skills and grow personally. You’ll play a key role in shaping their future.

5. Create unforgettable memories.

Summer hosting is short-term but full of fun! Barbecues, local trips and family traditions become special moments for both your family and the student.

To qualify for the hosting program, families must include a host sibling of the same gender within four years of age of the delegate (families with younger children may host a chaperone). Host families should have an interest in both learning about a new culture and sharing theirs with their new “family member.” They should offer a friendly, welcoming home with an adult or older child present at all times for their visiting delegate. Host families provide delegates with three meals a day and their own bed or air mattress, and kids of the same gender may share a room.

The planned dates for this year’s delegation trip from Taiwan are June 28 through July 26, and delegations from Korea and Japan will visit Kentucky from July 22 through August 17.
