The Caldwell County Project Development Board disclosed three potential locations for the proposed judicial center, asking for input from guests in attendance at the public hearing at the Caldwell County Courthouse.

The Kentucky General Assembly authorized the modern judicial center project for fiscal years 2024-2026. Ownership of the facility will belong to Caldwell County, while the Administrative Office of the Courts will fund construction and upkeep from the Judicial Branch budget.

The project is estimated to cost $33.1 million, and the state will fully finance it through annual debt service payments capped at $2.8 million.

DAWSON SPRINGS — Gov. Andy Beshear joined Dawson Springs leaders and community members Friday to break ground on the rebuilding of the city's pool and park, which were destroyed in the December 2021 tornado.

"This groundbreaking has been a long time coming," Beshear said. "The last time I was here, I visited the memorial to those 19 community members lost in the 2021 tornado outbreak. As we reflected that day, we took a moment of silence. And you know what I remember? I remember what we heard. We heard the hammers from the construction going on on all of these houses around us. It was in a very solemn moment, an amazing, incredible sound to hear. It was a sound of progress. It was a sound of hope. And we're going to hear that again today when we break ground on this park."

Beshear emphasized his connection to the region, as his family is from the area. "As you drive into town, I pass where my grandparents are buried," Beshear said. "We passed this park on our way downtown, and then towards where their house used to be."

His grandfather — and Dawson Springs Mayor Jenny Sewell's father — preached at Primitive Baptist Church, which was destroyed by the tornado.
