MALACHI

more would be needed from him as a sophomore.

"Last year, you could see in games, I was getting thrown around and getting tired super easily," he said. "I can't be that way anymore. I can't be getting tired in two-minute spurts. I can't be getting thrown around in the paint. I play in the SEC. It's a physical league. It's a fast league. I got to be in the best shape, and I got to be my best."

Despite the inauspicious start to Moreno's sophomore summer, Pope and teammates were in agreement that he is poised for a true breakout.

Practicing against 7-foot, 270-pound Washington transfer Franck Kepnang should provide Moreno with plenty of preparation for battles against the more physical centers he will face this season. Pope's offense worked much better in his first season at Kentucky when center Amari Williams acted as a distributor in the paint.

Moreno may not be Williams yet, but Pope reported in a recent scrimmage the sophomore tallied three assists in the first four minutes.

"Malachi is a beast," Kepnang said. "I mean, like every summer, when we all putting the team together, everybody has got a little phase where we are all trying to get acclimated to each other and to play. So, I think that was just a phase of the summer for him. I think it only lasted a very short amount of time, probably a couple days.

"But after that, ever since, Malachi has been Malachi. I mean, he's been great."

It would be a stretch to describe Pope's early summer frustration with Moreno as a compliment, but it is at least an acknowledgement of his importance to Kentucky.

Moreno returned to be the Wildcats' star and Pope expects him to practice like one.

"His interior scoring has improved dramatically," Pope said. "His use of quicks has improved dramatically. His rim protection is a place we're really pushing to be really aggressive as a rim protector. Our two-point-at-rim-field-goal percentage is a hugely important number for us. He's had a huge impact there.

"He's taken on a leadership role where our guys see him as a leader and a veteran on this team. So he's grown in a lot of ways, and he is a really important piece of this team in our success."

and education that explore how sound, history, and identity intersect. His work bridges academic inquiry and artistic practice through performance, fieldwork, and international collaboration.

Chen Lin Ma is a Taiwanese musician and educator with a background in Western classical music. She is an accomplished pianist and flutist. Ma and Huang are partners both in life and on stage, collaborating closely in music and education.

This is a free show, but the organizers are asking that you go to MadTix-Events.com and RSVP for the event, so they can get a feel for attendance and make sure there is enough seating.

HOT TIP TO THE WEEK

The Riverboat Inn has long been an active and enthusiastic participant in our local music scene. Their shows with Joe & Deano up on the back patio have become legendary, and are well attended. But now they are "turning it up to ELEVEN" with a brand new music and event space they built just below the motel, overlooking the river and the scenic Milton-Madison Bridge. The space features two large garage doors which will be opened to the cool evening air this weekend, with music on both Friday and Saturday nights. Come check out this exciting new addition to Indiana's Music City!

Charlie Rohlfing is a retired advertising man and partner in The Red Bicycle Hall music venue. Look for his distinctive fedora bobbing above the crowd anywhere local live music is happening.
