

AG WEEK,

A Table Top Farm display at Jamestown Elementary.

As part of this effort, the Women's Committee donated copies of "How Did That Get In My Lunchbox?" to every elementary school library in the county and to the Russell County Public Library.

The committee also organized a county-wide coloring contest for second-grade students.

The artwork is now proudly displayed throughout Russell County thanks to the support of local businesses who partnered in showcasing the students' work and celebrating their creativity.

In addition, the women's committee hosted an Agriculture Bookmark Contest for grades three through five, where students created original designs showcasing farming in Russell County.

Winners will receive cash prizes, and the first-place bookmark will be reproduced and shared with local educators and community members.

The committee's outreach concluded the week's celebration by participation in Ag Career Day at Russell Springs Elementary School, organized by first-grade teacher and committee member, Jalena Bryant.

During the event, twelve presenters, including committee members Johnna Dalton & Michelle Roy shared details about their agriculture occupations to first and second grade students.

Students were able to learn about local agriculture careers and how they are each intertwined together to provide food and products within our community.

Furthermore, connecting to student's interest in farming and animals, plus their core academic studies of math, science, and technology.

In continued celebration of Ag Career Day, goodie bags were distributed to all RSES primary students, generously donated by The Dairy Alliance and Kentucky Proud.

Russell County Public Library Children's Librarian Ginger Stapp with books donated by the local Farm Bureau Women's Committee.

As well as, a catered meal provided by the Women's Committee for the event's presenters, showing appreciation for those who shared their agricultural knowledge and career experiences with the students.

Russell County Farm Bureau Women's Committee member Johnna Dalton read to second graders.

Through these efforts, the Russell County Farm Bureau Women's Committee continues to play a vital role in promoting agricultural awareness, supporting education, and strengthening connections between local farms and the community's youngest learners.
