COFFEY,

Shogun restaurant in Russell Springs, person after person praised the efforts of a behind-the-scenes, soft-spoken man who is credited with making things happen.

Jeremy Coffey has served as Russell Springs Economic Development Director for several years.

"He's kind of our 'secret weapon,'" Mayor Eddie Thomas said. "He's always working on something, he travels all over meeting with people...trying to bring things to city."

As an example, Harlan Judd, one of the owners of the Shogun coming to the city, said Coffey's "tireless efforts" led to an eventual commitment.

"The first word out of my mouth was 'No,'" Judd said. "But Jeremy repeatedly came to see us...(and) by the time of our third or fourth meeting, I realized I was agreeing with Jeremy about everything we were going to do."

"Without Jeremy's efforts, none of this would be going on," Judd said.

Coffey also serves on the Russell County Industrial Development Authority (RCIDA) Board where he is known for asking tough questions and retaining an amazing amount of facts, figures and statistics relating to recruitment.

Mayor Thomas said even though he works for the city, Coffey always considers what is best for the entire county.

"That's just the kind of person he is," the mayor said. "He takes everybody and everything into consideration because he wants what's best for us all."

The mayor said he is beyond confident of Coffey's abilities.

"He's a real getter," Thomas said. "At any given time, he doesn't have just one of two projects he's working on...he may have four or five...and looking for more."
